illegality was not in what the attorney was to do but in the manner in which he was to be compensated for doing the legal thing, then he can recover upon a quantum meruit for the reasonable value of his services; but when the illegality, either in whole or in part, is in the thing which he was to do, there can be no recovery upon a quantum meruit.[64]

b. Services Covered

Generally an attorney can recover for any lawful services he was requested to perform.

Provided an attorney's act is neither illegal nor criminal,[65] he may generally recover for rendering any services he has been requested to perform.[66] He may recover for advising with a sheriff about the levy of an execution,[67] for attendance at a hearing although the hearing is defaulted[68] or although the officer conducting the hearing was irregularly appointed,[69] for attendance at the taking of depositions, although the depositions were unnecessary,[70] for avoiding impending litigation,[71] for conducting a negotiation,[72] or for time spent in court while waiting for trial,[73] but where an attorney is detained over Sunday, he may not charge for attendance, because testimony may not legally be taken on that day.[74]

He may not recover for doing an act which he knows is useless[75] unless it was demanded by the client,[76] nor is he entitled to compensation both as broker and as attorney,[77] but business matters incidentally appropriate to his employment are included therein,[78] and it has been held that compensation for the reasonable value of services as attorney in fact may be recovered, although plaintiff also acted as attorney at law for defendant.[79] Disclosure to a fraternal benefit society of information concerning a fraudulent death claim paid by it is not the performance of "legal services;"[80] and an attorney cannot recover for assuming liability as an indorser of notes where there was no such arrangement in advance.[81]

Contract inherently malum in se

Where plaintiff and another person had prepared and caused to be circulated, for signatures, initiative petitions ostensibly for the purpose of having them filed with the secretary of state so that they could go upon the ballot, but actually for the purpose of extorting money for having them suppressed from parties who would be injuriously affected should the proposed legislation be enacted, and not filed with the secretary of state, and, to enable plaintiff to carry out his fraudulent purpose, he entered into an agreement with defendant that he would perform for defendant all legal services that he might require for four years without charge, if defendant would make a proposal to persons interested therein that plaintiff would withdraw such petitions from circulation and prevent the proposed measure from going upon the ballot if they would pay him the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars for doing so, and pursuant to such illegal agreement defendant made such proposals, it was held that the agreement was void as against public policy, and the attorney could not recover on the quantum meruit for services performed thereunder—Eastham v. (1) In General

In the absence of an express agreement as to the amount of an attorney's compensation, an implied agreement arises, under which he is entitled to a reasonable compensation, measured by the reasonable value of his services.

An attorney is entitled to fees which are fair and just and will adequately compensate him for his services.[82] In the absence of an express agreement between him and his client, as to the amount of his compensation, an implied agreement arises with regard thereto, which stands on the same footing as like agreements between other parties,[83] and accordingly it is a well-settled rule that, when an attorney renders services, upon request or employment, without any agreement as to his fee, he is entitled to a fair, just, and reasonable compensation, which is measured by the reasonable value of the services rendered to the client,[84] and, according to the character and extent of the services rendered, this may exceed or fall short of the amount of taxable costs.[85] The general rule applies to special services performed by an attorney outside of his usual retainer.[86]

The reasonable value of an attorney's services cannot be determined by any fixed formula or regular measure of value;[87] and the fact that an at-

"Where one employs an attorney at law to perform legal services, whether in a regular court procedure or otherwise, and there is not, at the time of such employment or subsequent thereto, an express agreement between the parties as to the amount the attorney is to be paid for his services, the law, under such circumstances, implies a contract upon the part of the one employing such attorney to pay him a reasonable compensation for such services"—F L Stitt & Co. v. "There is no law and no absolute torney is an officer of the court does not justify setting up the salaries paid by the state to its officials as a standard or limit of the amount of compensation to be paid to the attorney.[88] The measure of compensation is the reasonable value of the services rendered in themselves, and not the benefits to the client,[89] although, as noted in subdivision (2) hereof, the benefits or results secured may be considered as bearing on the efficiency of the services and thus on their reasonable value. It has been held, that an attorney is generally entitled to recover what he could have obtained under a contract made in advance.[90] Where the services are of a general nature the amount of compensation may be based on a monthly valuation of such services.[91]

As fixed by unaccepted offer. A client who accepts services rendered under an offer containing alternative propositions, neither of which was accepted by the client, must pay the reasonable value of the services, determined by the standard of compensation fixed by the propositions.[92]

Fee stipulated in note. Where an attorney arranges for the collection of a note, which provides for a specified fee, an agreement is implied that he will be paid the fee stipulated in the note,[93] and the fact that he sends a bill to his client for a minimum fee does not estop him from claiming the full amount due under such agreement.[94]

What law governs. The reasonableness of an attorney's fee is to be determined at the place where the attorney resides and practices, and not at the place where the services are rendered.[95]

(2) Facts and Circumstances for Consideration

(a) In general

(b) As to amount of retainer

(a) In General

The reasonableness of an attorney's fee, in a particular case, depends on the facts and circumstances thereof. Various factors are to be considered, among others the amount and character of the services rendered, the nature and character of the fee, the customary charge, and the financial ability or prominence of the client.

The reasonableness of the fee charged or allowed must be determined like any other fact in issue in a judicial proceeding, and in making such determination all the facts and circumstances of the particular case, including so far as applicable those enumerated herein below, must be taken into consideration.[96]

In determining what is a reasonable attorney's fee or allowance for legal services rendered, many and varied elements or factors are to be considered.[97] Among the principal elements or factors

The amount in controversy is properly considered in ascertaining a reasonable fee for an attorney entitled to a quantum meruit compensation after discharge from a contingent employment contract.—Bryant v Browning, (Tex.Civ App) 48 S W (2d) 798

Appearance merely nominal

Where the lien of an estate against the land involved in an action by a purchaser against his vendor was not contested, so that the appearance for the estate in the action was merely nominal, an allowance of four hundred eleven dollars to the attorneys of the estate, will be set aside—McClellan v. Morris, 206 P. 575, 71 Colo 304

The labor, time, and trouble involved and expended by the attorney, are also elements to be considered,[1] although it has been held that the element of time is of minor importance, and standing alone is not a basis for compensation.[2] Time, in this connection, means the length of time employed by the attorney in preparation for, and trial of, the case, and not the length of the time the litigation has been permitted to remain in court.[3]

As material element

"The results accomplished by an

although other things besides material gain are involved,[5] but, it has been held that prospective benefits cannot be considered for such purpose.[6]

Other facts that may be considered include the cost of the attorney's reasonable traveling expenses,[7] the demand for his services by others,[8] the expenses incurred in following the case from court to court,[9] the overhead expenses of the attorney in maintaining his office,[10] the reasonableness and regularity of the employment,[11] the relationship between the parties,[12] and whether the attorney has been otherwise compensated than by the allowance he may receive.[13]

The value of one attorney's services, however, is not measured by the result attained by another attorney;[14] and compensation to an attorney cannot be based on a settlement between his client and third parties beyond the results factored by the suit wherein the attorney is engaged;[15] nor is the value of his services affected by the fact that the client, under the attorney's direction, worked up facts which enabled the attorney to win the case,[16] nor by the fact that the client employs other counsel to assist, after the regular attorney has substantially completed the transaction.[17]

The success or failure of an attorney's services for his client is not a test of the value of his fees,[18] but may be considered as a factor in determining such value.[19]

Services rendered to incompetent. The court has the power to fix the compensation of an attorney for an incompetent, based on the reasonable value of the services rendered.[20] Where services are rendered in behalf of an infant as guardian ad attorney for his client constitute a material element in the value of the legal services"—McDougal v. Black Panther Oil & Gas Co., (C.C.A.Okl.) 277 F. 701, 707—6 C.J. p. 752 note 28 [a].

Services incidental to sustaining trust

In determining the reasonable amount of fees to be allowed attorneys for trustees whose services resulted in preserving the trust estate, the services rendered by the attorneys in connection with controversies as to certain features of the trust, as to which they were unsuccessful except to the extent of securing a decision that those features did not invalidate the entire trust, may be considered.—In re Duffill's Estate, 206 P. 42, 188 Cal. 536.

Skill, diligence, and legal knowledge of counsel in a lawsuit, as affecting his right to recover compensation, should be measured in a large degree by the result of the litigation, and not by the number of pleadings filed, or their length, or the number of times counsel appeared in court, or the number of hours consumed in oral argument.—Cornelius v. However, when he gives his entire time almost exclusively to a particular retainer for a considerable period, so that his office facilities are devoted in a large degree to such employment, and when no extra charge is made for disbursements, the cost of maintaining his office should be considered in fixing the fee. Office expenses, commonly termed overhead, absorb so large a part of the gross fees of a professional man that, when his entire time is given to one client, such expenses must be considered in fixing the compensation"—Reichert v. As required by statute

litem, or otherwise, the attorney is entitled to have the compensation therefor fixed as for similar services rendered to an adult,[21] except that where he acts as guardian ad litem for an infant having no estate, his fees are taxed as part of the costs, and are little more than nominal fees.[22]

Services to trust or charity. Compensation for services rendered by an attorney to a public trust or charity must be moderate, more so perhaps than if rendered to an individual or private concern.[23]

Services of different character. It has been held that where an attorney is employed to render both legal and clerical services he should be compensated for the clerical work on the basis of clerical services.[24] On the other hand, it has been held that where he is required by his employment to devote his entire time to services not strictly legal, it is just that he should be compensated at the same rate as for legal services,[25] as where, under an employment by a bank, he is required to devote his entire time to the affairs of the bank to rescue it from financial straits.[26] An attorney employed to abstract and examine the title to land is not restricted in his fee therefor to what is usually charged by professional abstracters for such service.[27] Merely clerical services of an attorney's employees are not compensable at the same rate as services by a duly admitted attorney.[28]

Character of fee. It being a recognized rule that an attorney may properly charge a much larger fee when it is to be contingent than when it is not, the character of the compensation, as whether the fee is absolute or contingent, is an element to be considered in determining the reasonableness of the fee,[29] although there is authority to the contrary.[30] Whether a contingent fee is excessive cannot be determined by the sum ultimately due thereunder, as such sum depends on the amount the client receives.[31]

Customary or usual charges. The customary charges or fees, if any, for similar services is an important element to be considered in determining the reasonable value of services rendered by an attorney,[32] and not what the attorney thinks is reasonable;[33] and speaking generally, in the absence of a special contract, an attorney is entitled to the amount that is reasonable and customary in the same vicinity for services of like kind, pertorney to contract with an infant's guardian to prosecute any claim for the benefit of the infant on a contingency basis, but requiring the court, on recovery of a judgment or on the compromise and settlement of the claim, to fix the attorney's compensation, the court must in every such case determine the attorney's reasonable compensation before the attorney has any right to any pecuniary return for his services—In re Jeromer, 239 N.Y.S. 304, 228 App. Div. 123.

formed under like conditions and circumstances.[34] Employment of an attorney with knowledge of his rate of charges, without stipulating as to price, may be regarded as evidence of a contract to pay at such rate;[35] but the fact that the client, when informed, during the pendency of a suit, of the charges his attorney is making, fails to express dissatisfaction, is not an acquiescence in those charges, and does not bind him to pay at such rate for future services in the same suit.[36] An unentered order fixing the compensation of an attorney for services rendered cannot control the amount of recovery in a subsequent action for such services.[37]

Bar association schedule of charges. In determining the reasonableness of an attorney's fee, the schedule of minimum fees prescribed by the local bar association is persuasive, but not conclusive, of the reasonable value of the services;[38] and in the absence of a special or implied agreement, a client is not necessarily bound to pay according to the rates prescribed by the rules and regulations of the bar association.[39]

Itemized services and charges. Where the services all relate to one subject matter, it forms no just measure of the value of the services to separate the transaction into parts and have the attorney state what charge he made for each separate part.[40] Where the trial court has before it a detailed statement as to the extent of the services rendered, it is the court's province to use its own experience and judgment as to the reasonable value thereof.[41]

Joint employment. Where a number of attorneys are associated they are entitled to a reasonable fee for all of them, and one of them cannot, by accepting from the joint client less than a reasonable fee, deprive the other attorneys of such a fee,[42] nor can one attorney by putting in a claim for a specified fee, without the acquiescence of the other, limit the right of the latter to recover a different fee.[43] So, where an attorney is employed by several parties in the same case, all but one of whom agree to pay him a fixed fee, the other party is not bound by such agreement, and the attorney may charge him only the reasonable value of his services.[44]

Financial ability or prominence of client. The financial ability of a client may be taken into consideration, not for the purpose of enhancing the amount above a reasonable compensation,[45] but for the purpose of determining whether or not he is able to pay a fair and just compensation for the services rendered,[46] and as a factor in determining the value of the attorney's services,[47] or as an incident in ascertaining the importance and

As supported by evidence

Attorneys who were successful in setting aside, on the ground of fraud, a bond issue of one hundred twenty-five thousand dollars, and a one hundred thousand dollar courthouse contract after litigation in both the superior and supreme courts, necessitating legal ability of a high order and effecting a considerable saving to the county, are entitled to compensation of two thousand dollars, where the county in a resolution admitted such amount to be reasonable and three disinterested attorneys each testified that a reasonable charge was an amount greater than two thousand dollars—Donworth & Todd v. 51. Libby v. Kipp, 262 P. 68, 87 Cal App. 538

In action for death

In an action by a client to recover from her attorney a portion of the five thousand dollars retained by the attorney as fee for services in recovering a judgment of twenty-three thousand five hundred dollars in a United States district court for the death of plaintiff's husband, and securing an affirmance thereof by the circuit court of appeals, the trial court's finding that the charge was not excessive was not without reasonable foundation, and the charge was not so excessive as to require reversal of a judgment for the attorney—Platt v. Shields, 119 A. 520, 96 Vt. 257.

(2) Four hundred and fifty dollars reduced to two hundred and twenty-five where half of the work was performed after others were employed to dismiss the suit—Murphy v. Stennett, 4 S.W. (2d) 932, 176 Ark. 1205

(3) Twenty-five hundred dollars excessive, where verdict was for five thousand dollars, and the case was not exceptionally difficult and other attorneys retried the case and recovered a verdict—Gruskay v. Simenauskas, 140 A. 724, 107 Conn. 380

(4) Three thousand dollars reduced to twelve hundred, for defense on charges of arson and burning, with intent to defraud—Raimondi v. Bianchi, 136 A. 320, 100 N.J.Eq. 448, reversed on other grounds 140 A. 584, 102 N.J.Eq. 254

(5) Three thousand dollars reduced to one thousand for settling a twenty thousand dollar federal income tax claim against the client out of court for two hundred fifty dollars—Peltier v. Thibodaux, 144 So. 903, 175 La. 1026

(6) Forty-five hundred dollars reduced to twenty-five hundred for preparing a brief of twenty-three pages, presenting a fact question, and arguing the cause on appeal—Fannon v. Le Beau, 232 N.W. 115, 245 Mich. 162.

(7) Six thousand dollars, reduced to four thousand as compensation for attorneys who organized a drainage district resulting in the sale of bonds in the sum of three hundred forty-five thousand dollars—Bayou Meto Drainage Dist. v. Chapline, 220 S.W. 807, 143 Ark. 446

(8) Fifteen thousand dollars reduced to five thousand dollars for services of an attorney who took assignment of a mortgage as security, foreclosed the mortgage, collected rents, and sold the realty some seven years later at a large profit—Davitt v. O'Connor, (C.C.A.N.Y.) 73 F (2d)

unless, although excessive, it was determined in accordance with an agreement between the parties,[53] or it may be set aside or, in a proper case, the amount be increased if it is determined to be insufficient or inadequate.[54] The fee of an attorney, who drew a will, for successfully defending a contest of the will should not be reduced merely because the heirs contested the will.[55]

(b) As to Amount of Retainer

An attorney, in the absence of an express agreement, is entitled to a reasonable retainer fee, to be determined from the facts of the particular case

In the absence of an express agreement, an attorney is entitled to a reasonable amount as a retainer.[56] This amount may depend on the facts and circumstances of each particular case,[57] such as on the ability and standing of the attorney,[58] the extent of his practice,[59] the probability of the retainer interfering with his relations to, or accepting business from, other persons,[60] the magnitude and nature of the business,[61] and the probability of the business bringing him a large remuneration from the client.[62]

If his retainer is general, including all business of the client for a stated period, the pertinent considerations are different from those resulting from an employment for a single case.[63]

b. Amount on Which Percentage Reckoned

A contingent fee is generally reckoned on the net amount actually recovered by the client through the efforts of the attorney, or through a proper settlement by the client.

Under a contract for a contingent fee, the percentage to which the attorney is entitled and the amount or property on which it is to be based depend on a fair and reasonable construction of the terms of the agreement;[64] and such fee generally is recoverable only on the property or funds, with-

(9) One hundred thousand dollars reduced to fifty thousand in a suit to set aside a five hundred and fifty thousand dollar gift—U S v. Equitable Trust Co of New York, (N.Y.) 51 S Ct 629, 283 U S 738, 75 L Ed 1379, modifying (C C A.) Barnet v Equitable Trust Co of New York, 34 F (2d) 916, certiorari granted U S v Equitable Trust Co. of New York, 50 S Ct. 160, 280 U S. 550, 74 L Ed 609

As shocking conscience

A fee of two thousand dollars for representing a client in a suit in the nature of an interpleader, where the issues were simple and no great time in preparation was required, has been held to be so excessive as to "shock the conscience" of the appellate court, unless a twelve hundred and fifty dollar remittitur was filed, notwithstanding the trial court's finding that two thousand dollars was a reasonable fee was supported by testimony.—Ligon v Greenwall, (Tex Civ. App.) 1 S W (2d) 325, reversed on other grounds Greenwal v. Ligon, (Com App.) 14 S W.(2d) 829.

Obtaining pardon

Where an attorney by proper presentation of the facts concerning a homicide case secures a pardon of one convicted, his services in submitting the matter to the Governor do not entitle him to a fee of over five hundred dollars, and a fee of one thousand dollars is excessive—Newbold v McCrorey, 87 S.E. 542, 103 S. C 299, modified on other grounds 87 S E 1102, 103 S C 299.

Sending bill

The fact that the attorney sends a bill for a given amount and estimates the value of his services at this amount in a verified complaint, may render excessive and call for a reduction of, a larger amount as allowed by the court—Prager v. New Jersey Fidelity & Plate Glass Ins. Co of Newark, N J, 156 N E 76, 245 N Y 1, 52 A L R 193, modifying 216 N Y S 400, 217 App Div. 630.

(2) Two hundred and seventy dollars increased to three hundred and fifty for making abstracts of title—Pelletier v. Standard Oil Co., 4 La. App. 37.

(3) Two thousand dollars increased to five thousand where the client agreed to pay attorneys one third of the amount to be recovered from suit in accounting of an alleged partnership between the client and his brother and who, when he became beneficiary under the brother's will, dismissed appeal from dismissal of the accounting suit without the attorney's consent—Brandon v. Zerkowsky, 148 So. 797, 167 Miss. 186.

in the terms of the contract, which are recovered by reason of the attorney's efforts,[65] and, therefore, is not recoverable on uncontested claims[66] or sums voluntarily paid.[67]

The percentage coming to the attorney is usually reckoned on the amount actually recovered by the client,[68] and not on the amount of the judgment,[69] unless the language of the contract is such as to justify such an interpretation.[70] The amount actually recovered, within the meaning of this rule, is the net amount recovered, that is, the amount allowed by the judgment less the amount of any claim, expense, or offset that may properly be deducted therefrom;[71] and where the attorney negotiates a settlement for less than the amount of the judgment and seven months after the expiration of the redemption period sold the property for more than was due it at the time of the decree—Henry v. Contest or settlement

Under a contract providing that, in the event of a successful contest and breaking of a will, the attorney is to receive one half of any increase over the amount the client would have received under the will, but only one quarter if the increase is obtained by settlement, the attorney is not entitled to one half where the contract is settled by stipulation—Petition of Raymond, 212 N.Y.S 577, 214 App Div. 622, motion granted In re Raymond, 152 N E 415, 242 N Y. 534.

Division of proceeds of sale

Where the owner of a farm agreed that his attorney should have one half of the amount for which the farm sold in excess of an amount fixed, and the farm was exchanged for the interest of a vendor in a farm which he had sold, on which payments were owing but not due, and an amount in cash not sufficient to pay the sum agreed for defendant's farm, the owner is entitled to the value agreed on between himself and the attorney, with interest from the date of the exchange, and the amounts paid by him in completing the transaction, with interest, against which there should be charged all cash received by him as of the date of receipt; and, on receipt of enough to pay the owner the sum fixed as the value of his farm, the balance should be divided equally between the parties.—Child v. Mastin, 204 N W 947, 164 Minn. 217

On different amounts

Under a contingent fee contract for attorney's services, providing for five per cent of the amount realized of the sum shown to be due on the face of the contract, believed to be about thirty thousand dollars, plus fifty per cent of all moneys collected in excess of such amount, the attorney is entitled to fifty per cent of a recovery in excess of thirty thousand dollars—Carter v. Marvel Carburetor Co, 256 N W. 608, 269 Mich. 21.

Real and personal property

A contract, providing for the payment to an attorney of twenty per cent of the share in an estate that might be found to belong to the client, entitles the attorney to twenty per cent of the client's share of both real and personal property—Beck v. Boucher, 195 P. 996, 114 Wash. 574.

With or without "trial"

Under a contract by which a client agrees to pay an attorney one half the amount collected "if trial of cause is had," but in the event of a compromise without trial "to pay one-third of the recovery," the word "trial," in its broader sense, meaning on the merits and not a trial of the issues of law only, where there is no trial on the merits, the attorney is entitled to one third only—Denson v. Caddell, 77 So. 720, 201 Ala 194.

Property or income

Under a contract whereby the attorneys were to receive one fourth of the property which the client, as surviving wife, might receive as community property, and the value of one fourth of the property distributed by the executor to the trustee above the amount shown in the executor's final account to be so distributable, the attorneys are not entitled to one fourth of a sum of money paid to the client as income from the entire estate from the date of her husband's death—Miller v. Wing, 50 P.(2d) 470, 9 Cal App (2d) 483.

Proceeds of another suit

Under an agreement that the attorneys for plaintiff in two patent infringement suits should receive seven and one-half per cent of amount received from defendant in one of the suits pending in Connecticut, the attorneys were entitled to compensation only from the proceeds derived from the Connecticut suit, and hence were not entitled to establish a statutory lien on the proceeds derived from the suit pending in New York.—Nic Projector Corporation v Movie-Jecktor Co., (D C N.Y.) 16 F.Supp. 605

Sum realized subsequent to foreclosure

A mortgagee, agreeing to pay an attorney for services in a foreclosure suit fifty dollars and whatever additional amount of the four hundred fifty dollar fee proved in the suit could be realized from the foreclosure, was not liable for an additional fee where such mortgagee purchased the property at the foreclosure sale for less than the amount of the judgment and seven months after the expiration of the redemption period sold the property for more than was due it at the time of the decree—Henry v. Federal Land Bank of St Louis, 4 N E (2d) 664, 284 Ill App 656

Special sum for the payment of debts, allowed to the client, should be included in the amount on which the attorney's percentage is to be computed, under a contract for a certain percentage of the amount awarded to the client—Chadwick v. Walsh, 28 N.W. 602, 70 Mich. 627.

Payment in realty

tiates a settlement whereby the amount allowed the adverse party as a set-off is larger than the amount allowed his client, on his claim, he is entitled to no fee.[72] If the amount recovered includes a sum for an attorney's fee, he is entitled only to the specified percentage of such fee, and not to the entire fee.[73]

The amount recovered includes an amount secured, but not presently available,[74] and an amount from which the client was released from liability by the judgment.[75]

In case of compromise or settlement. In case of a proper compromise by the client in good faith, the percentage is based on the value of the property or sum actually received or accepted in settlement,[76] and the same rule applies where the compromise is negotiated by the attorney.[77] Where, on such settlement, the adverse party agrees to pay the attorney, it has been held that the attorney's fee or percentage is based on the amount received by the client in settlement;[78] but, on the other hand, it has been held that, under such an

Compensation of attorney in fact

An attorney, contracting with an attorney in fact of persons claiming shares of an estate as heirs to collect and distribute such shares after the deduction of a fixed compensation for the attorney in fact and one half the amount of the net recovery as compensation for the attorney, was not entitled to retain more than one half the amount collected for the heirs, notwithstanding the negligence of the heirs in failing to collect the full amount owing them as proceeds of the settlement by the attorney in fact—Hyden v Combs, 98 S W (2d) 293, 266 Ky. 140

A stockholder, agreeing to pay her attorney from the proceeds of sale of corporate property, is liable only on the amount received after deducting assessments levied on the stock—Williams v. Bevis, 278 P. 193, 152 Wash. 469, followed in 279 P. 1119, 153 Wash. 701.

Amount client sees fit to accept

Where the contract between an attorney and client provides that the former shall receive fifty per cent of the amount of a claim, whether obtained by suit or compromise, the attorney cannot recover from defendant more than half the sum the client sees fit to accept.—Nichols v. Orr, 166 P. 561, 63 Colo. 333, 2 A.L.R. 449.

Settlement of condemnation proceedings

(1) An attorney who defends a suit to condemn water rights, under a contract for a percentage of the amount received on a sale of riparian lands, is entitled, where a power company purchases the riparian lands in settlement of the condemnation proceedings, to his percentage on the amount received for the entire property, but not on the value of the water rights.—Preston v. Herminghaus, 292 P. 952, 211 Cal. 1.

(2) A loss resulting from the failure of the clients in selling riparian land to a power company to allocate the value of water rights should be borne by the clients themselves, and not by the attorneys who contracted for a percentage of the amount received.—Preston v. Herminghaus, supra.

(3) A sale of the entire riparian property to a power company after the commencement of condemnation suits amounts to a "compromise" of all the condemnation proceedings, within a contract allowing attorneys a percentage of the damages collected.—Preston v. Herminghaus, supra.

Realization by compromise or otherwise

Under a contract for the services of an attorney providing for payment to the attorney of twenty five per cent of the moneys received by plaintiff from defendant by settlement or otherwise, the attorney was entitled to twenty five per cent of everything realized by the client from the cause of action against defendant—Nic Projector Corporation v. Movie-Jecktor Co., (D.C.N.Y.) 16 F.Supp. 605

77. Bogle & Sharp v. Walker, 202 S. W. 478, 133 Ark. 294.

Amount received in settlement by the client, under negotiations previously commenced and dropped before the attorney was retained, but reopened and successfully concluded with his aid, is a proper matter for consideration of the jury in finding the value of the attorney's services.—Anderson v. Rindge Co., 270 P. 262, 93 Cal.App. 725.

Contract value of land, the proceeds of the settlement of the litigation, must be taken as the basis of the settlement of the litigation for the purpose of fixing the amount due the attorneys who negotiated the settlement.—Bogle & Sharp v. Walker, 202 S.W. 478, 133 Ark. 294.

78. Ky.—McCormack v. Louisville, agreement, the payment to the attorney is in addition to the payment to the client, that the amount of the latter payment does not constitute the full amount of the settlement, and that the attorney's fee is based on the amount to be paid the client plus the amount due the attorney under his contract.[79]

Costs and interest. The amount recovered, on which the attorney's percentage is to be reckoned, has been held to include costs,[80] unless the agreement is to the contrary.[81] Accrued interest should also be included in the amount recovered,[82] and the fact that the attorney agrees that, if the award is made on a certain basis, he would accept a certain percentage as his fee does not preclude him from sharing interest recovered on a different basis.[83] However, the attorney is not entitled to a percentage of interest which accrues after the recovery;[84] and, under a contract to secure refunds, the attorney cannot participate in interest ordered to be paid to the client, since it is not a refund,[85] and a contract for a percentage of the claims adjudged the client does not include interest on the claims, nor interest on interest on the claims[86]

On value of property taken in satisfaction. Where property is taken in part satisfaction of the judgment obtained, the attorney is entitled to his percentage computed on the fair value of the property, without regard to the price at which it was taken.[87] If the property recovered increases in value, the attorney is entitled to his proportion of the larger amount,[88] but not to rents accruing before the successful result was obtained.[89]

c. Right to Interest

An attorney generally is not entitled to interest on an unliquidated demand for compensation, but is entitled to interest on a liquidated demand therefor from the time it is due or a demand of payment is made.

An attorney suing to collect compensation for services cannot recover interest on unliquidated demands either for fees or costs,[90] interest running in such cases only from the date when the attorney's claim for compensation has been reduced to judgment.[91] It has been held, however, that the allowance of interest in such a case is discretionary,[92] and interest will be allowed on money due where the client was able to determine the amount, although the attorney may have claimed a greater sum than was actually due[93]

When the amounts are liquidated, interest on the fee runs from the time the same becomes due or from the time of demand for payment, and on disbursements from the time when the money was paid out[94] The fact that the contract recog-

Amount reserved for attorney

Where, after judgment, the client settled for less than the judgment without consulting his attorney, employed on a contingent fee, and the adversary retained enough to pay the stipulated portion to the attorney, and there was no evidence of fraud, the attorney could recover nothing from the client in excess of amount reserved—Corcoran v George Kellogg Structural Co., 166 N.Y.S 269, 179 App Div. 396

Reimbursement

Where the adverse party, in addition to paying the amount of the settlement, agrees to reimburse the client for any sum he should be compelled to pay his attorney, the attorney's percentage is based on the amount of the settlement plus the sum the attorney would be entitled to under his contract—Johnson v Great Northern Ry Co, 151 N W 125, 128 Minn. 365, L R A 1917B 1140

nized that the parties might not by agreement be able to arrive at a sum certain, and provided a method for fixing the amount in case of disagreement, makes the sum none the less certain in legal contemplation [95]

On the termination of the relation of attorney and client the former at once becomes entitled to be paid for his services, and in default thereof interest accrues from that date.[96]

d. Power and Discretion in Determining Amount of Fee

The determination of a reasonable attorney's fee for services rendered, in case of a controversy in regard thereto, is largely within the discretionary power of the court; and it may be fixed either with or without the aid of expert testimony as to value

Where there is a controversy as to an attorney's fee, the determination of the amount thereof is within the discretionary power of the trial court,[97] or on appeal, of the appellate court [98] Judicial determination of the value of an attorney's services, however, must be strictly kept within the limitations fixed by authority,[99] and in making such determination, the court should exercise care and caution, to the end that only reasonable fees for services rendered be allowed;[1] and neither the trial court nor the appellate court can, in adjusting such fee, arbitrarily ignore the undisputed evidence and the findings based thereon.[2]

While expert testimony, as to the value of an attorney's services, is admissible and should be given due weight,[3] it is not conclusive either on the jury or the court, or, in case of appeal, on the appellate court,[4] since the court, either trial or appellate, is itself an expert on the question, and may consider its own knowledge and experience concerning reasonable and proper fees,[5] and, in the light of such knowledge and experience, the court may form an independent judgment, from the facts or evidence before it, as to the nature and extent of the services rendered, and make an appraisal of such services and determine the rea-

§ 192. Payment and Recovery Back by Client

The general rules as to the recovery back of payments made apply to the recovery by a client of fees paid by him to his attorney.

The general rule, stated in the title Payment § 157 [48 C.J. p 759 note 82], that a payment made under a mistake of fact, and which the payor was under no legal obligation to make, may be recovered back, applies to payments of fees made by a client to his attorney, under a mistake or want of knowledge as to the fact that the attorney had failed to exercise the skill, diligence, and good faith required in rendering the services for which payment was made.[9] A client may also recover fees which he has paid under false representations made by the attorney,[10] or which he has paid to an attorney who wrongfully assigned the contract for services to another attorney;[11] or which he has paid to a judge for services rendered as attorney in violation of statute, since the parties are not in pari delicto.[12]

A client may also recover back the unearned portion of the fee where the attorney died[13] or was

An abandonment of the action by the client, however,[16] or the wrongful discharge of the attorney,[17] or the dismissal or settlement of the case in a manner involving less work than was anticipated[18] will not entitle the client to recover back fees paid, even though the attorney told him the fee would be nominal if the case was settled.[19] A client, also, cannot recover a fee, voluntarily paid, for services fully performed, the beneficial results of which he has received and accepted;[20] nor can he recover fees paid, which were included in a settlement between him and the attorney and which he entered into on his own judgment with full knowledge of the facts,[21] although the amount thereof was more than was formerly agreed on;[22] nor can he recover back a contingent fee by alleging that the contract was champertous.[23]

§ 193. Funds Subject to Payment of Compensation

a. In general
b. Funds in custody or control of court

a. In General

An attorney, generally, may retain the amount due him for fees from funds in his hands belonging to the client.

As a general rule, an attorney has the right, which in some states has the status of a retaining lien (infra § 225), to deduct and retain the unpaid balance due him for fees, from funds in his hands which belong to the client,[24] and this is so, although it is claimed that he is not entitled to fees

Attorneys who obtained judgment for trust company before the trust company closed were entitled to deduct their fee from the final payment made to them in settlement of the judgment, notwithstanding that such final payment was made after the liquidating trustees had taken charge of the trust company and that the attorneys did not represent the trustees, since the trustees were in substance the trust company in winding up its affairs.—In re Lancaster Trust Co., 186 A. 367, 323 Pa. 107.

In case of discharge
(1) An attorney engaged on a percentage basis, who is discharged after the judgment has been obtained, but before the judgment has been entirely satisfied, is entitled to retain sufficient of the client's money in his hands to compensate himself for the unpaid balance due him for his services.—In re Choate, (Okl.) 50 P.(2d) 706.

(2) Discharged attorney who had been employed on contingent fee basis, was not entitled to recover, from the client's alleged creditor, contingent interest in amount of the client's claim where the attorney had not created the fund from which his contingent fee was to be paid and showed no certainty of doing so.—Hamlin v. Case & Case, (Wash.) 61 P.(2d) 1287.

Reasonable fee to associate counsel may also be paid out of money collected.—Moscarelli v. Wakefield, 54 Pa. Super. 368

Balance of the fund, after such

or to the amount of fees claimed by him.[25] Money intrusted to an attorney and a member of a committee of promoters by the committee was held properly treated as the money of the committee, which the attorney was not required to pay over while fees for his services and expenses remained unpaid.[26]

An attorney cannot, however, retain his fee out of funds of his client, which have come into his hands for a special purpose,[27] such as for the purposes of a special trust,[28] or which have already been assigned to another, of which assignment the attorney had notice.[29]

If the client is dissatisfied with the amount retained, he may have his remedy therefor against the attorney.[30]

b. Funds in Custody or Control of Court

(2) Where number of persons interested

(1) In General

Where a fund is brought into a court of equity through the efforts of an attorney who looks to such fund for his compensation, the court may award him a reasonable compensation to be paid out of the fund.

Although, strictly speaking, an attorney has no lien for his compensation on any fund in the custody and control of the court (infra § 228), yet, where a fund is brought into a court of equity through the services of an attorney who looks to such fund alone for his compensation, or from which alone he is entitled to compensation, he is regarded as the equitable owner of the fund to the extent of the reasonable value of his services, and the court administering the fund will intervene for his protection and award him a reasonable compensation to be paid out of the fund.[31] This rule applies only to a court of equity, or to a proceeding in an orphans' court, and not to a common-law action, or to money in the hands of a sheriff under a writ of execution.[32]

Attorney for guardian and ward

An attorney, whose claim to a third of royalties as a fee for representing a guardian and ward in suits affecting the latter's title to land was allowed by the guardian and approved by the probate court, has an equitable interest in a royalty fund impounded by a bill of interpleader—Bolton v. Baldwin, (Tex. Civ App) 57 S W.(2d) 957.

Funds recovered or preserved for corporation

(1) Where, through a breach of duty by the officers or attorneys of a corporation, its rights are imperiled and stockholders are justified in intervening for their protection, a reasonable fee is properly allowable to the corporation's attorney from funds recovered for the corporation—Mecartney v. Guardian Trust Co, (C C A.Mo) 280 F. 64.

(2) Where the services of attorneys retained by trustees, appointed by a court for the benefit of creditors and stockholders of a corporation whose charter has lapsed, preserve property, their fees, exclusive of one's services as secretary, should be paid from the fund in the hands of court.—State v Wayne County Agr. Soc., 163 N W. 764, 101 Neb. 427.

32. Zinsser v. Zinsser, 33 Pa Super. 461.

The power of the court to award such compensation out of the fund, is impersonal, and acts only on the res, when within the custody and control of the court.[33] The allowance of the fee out of the fund is within the judicial discretion of the court,[34] and it may, either of itself or through an auditor, determine and fix the amount of the fee without a reference to a jury,[35] and order it to be paid direct to the attorney;[36] but it has been held that the attorney cannot, without the knowledge or authority of his client, file a written order with the court directing it to mark to his use a certain amount of the principal of a judgment obtained by him.[37] The court may also protect the client against being required to pay the same bill for fees twice out of such funds.[38]

The court cannot allow an attorney's claim for procuring an appropriation statute, from the funds created thereby, where the statute expressly limits the amount appropriated, as a trust fund, to particular purposes.[39]

Necessity of fund being secured by services

An attorney is entitled to have such an allowance of his fees, only where his services are properly authorized and operate to secure or collect, and bring into the custody and control of the court, the fund out of which he claims to be paid;[40] and, therefore, an allowance out of the fund cannot be made to an attorney whose services were performed in behalf of adverse interests, and in opposition to the fund.[41]

Against public policy

Public policy forbids courts, in the absence of statutory mandate or consent of an attorney's client, to adjudge and decree the attorney a part of the proceeds of a judgment recovered by him for his client—Board of Com'rs of Okfuskee County v. Haslewood, 192 P 217, 79 Okl 185, 11 A L R 709

Agreement as to bail money

Where a wife of one in jail deposited twenty-five dollars bail, and agreed that her husband's attorney should receive the amount remaining out of the bail money after payment of the fine, and the husband was fined ten dollars, and such fine was suspended and the attorney collected all the bail money, he was entitled at least to retain the fifteen dollars remaining, and the wife was not entitled to the other ten dollars, as the judge had no authority to suspend payment of the fine for more than twenty-four hours, under St § 2918, the wrongful payment thereof to the attorney by the clerk not reinvesting the title thereto in the wife—Hardin v. As creditor

An attorney for defendants, in an action in which subscriptions to stock were canceled as fraudulently induced by defendants, is not entitled to reimbursement for services

On appeal. On an appeal, the appellate court may fix an attorney's fees for services rendered, pending the appeal, and may direct the payment thereof out of a fund in the custody and control of the appellate court [42]

(2) Where Number of Persons Interested

An attorney who renders services in recovering or preserving a fund, in which a number of persons are interested, may in equity be allowed his compensation out of the whole fund, only where his services are rendered on behalf of, and are a benefit to, the common fund If he acts only for particular interests, his right to an allowance, ordinarily, extends only to the part of the fund which belongs to those whom he represents.

Where a number of persons are interested in the fund, as in the case of an estate or fund with a number of beneficiaries, compensation for legal services, as a general rule, can be imposed on the estate or fund, as a whole, only where such services are rendered on behalf of, and are beneficial to, the common estate or fund.[43] If the attorney's services are rendered in presenting or preserving the interests of only some of the parties or beneficiaries interested, his right to an allowance out of the fund, ordinarily, extends only to that part of the estate or fund which belongs to those whose interests he has represented in the suit.[44] For example, in a proceeding to wind up the affairs of an insolvent corporation, the attorneys who file a general creditors' bill, whereby creditors come in and file their claims, are entitled to compensation for such services out of the fund thus produced;[45] but solicitors representing only petitioning creditors must be paid by their clients out of the portion of the fund decreed to them; they cannot look to the general fund.[46]

If, however, the attorney's services, although employed by a part only of the persons interested, are for the benefit of all and have protected or preserved the whole estate or fund, his compensation may be allowed therefrom, where the other persons interested have stood by without counsel and will

as a creditor out of the subscription fund—Matteson v Weaver, 207 N W 838, 234 Mich. 92

Opposition to estate

Where an attorney had appeared for his client both as an administrator and as an individual, in an action to establish a debt due him by the estate and for a sale of lands of the estate to pay the same, and for the distribution of any surplus among the heirs, a court of equity has no power to fix his fee, except by the consent of parties, which is not given by an order of reference by consent to fix such fee, even though the suit has resulted in bringing the land and proceeds of sale under the control of the court of equity—Cauthen v. Cauthen, 56 S E 978, 76 S C. 226

Presenting claims against fund

Attorney's fees for presenting and securing the allowance of labor and material claims against a surety and funds in the hands of a city after a breach of a paving contract, should be paid by the parties for whose benefit the services were rendered, and not be deducted from the fund in hand, and then be collected back against the surety—Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey v Powell Paving & Contracting Co, 188 S E 184, 189 S C. 411, rehearing denied 188 S E 544, 140 S C 39

Resisting assessments

An attorney employed by policyholders of an insurance company to contest the validity of assessments laid on them by enjoining the company from doing business is not entitled to be paid for his services out of the funds in the hands of the receiver of the company subsequently appointed—Com v. Mechanics' Mut F. Ins Co, 122 Mass 421.

Common understanding of all parties

Where a controversy involved the question of priorities, and all parties understood that ultimately the fund would be awarded to supply claimants on the one hand or to noteholders on the other, to the complete exclusion of the other class of creditors, and the noteholders ultimately prevailed, the attorneys' fees could not be awarded to plaintiff supply claimants out of the fund involved.—First Nat Bank v Southern Cotton Oil Co, (C C A Ga) 86 F.(2d) 23

Intervention by individual bondholders of a corporation in a receivership, not resulting in an increase in funds in the hands of receivers or in subjection of additional property to receivership, does not require an allowance to interveners of fees from general funds subjected to receivership before intervention, although the interveners successfully and alone argue against the approval of the proposed sale of bonds.— Christian Women's Benev. Services not creating fund for benefit of others

Where a partition suit is for the sale of property in esse and in hand, and for the division of the proceeds of the sale, plaintiff's attorney is not entitled to compensation from defendants, on the theory that his services created a fund of which they received the benefit—Fletcher v Coomes, 52 App D C 159, 285 F. 893, certiorari denied 43 S.Ct. 363, 261 U S 619, 67 L Ed. 830 reap the benefits of such services;[47] or, in such a case, the attorney may be compensated by proportional contributions from the portions of persons who, notwithstanding their opposition, either expressly or impliedly accept the benefits of the attorney's services,[48] and the mere fact that some of the persons interested have employed counsel and opposed the suit which has benefited them, will not prevent their interests from being subjected to the payment of reasonable compensation to counsel who has succeeded in recovering or preserving the fund which is brought into the custody of the court.[49]

In accordance with these rules, an attorney's fees may be ordered to be paid out of a trust fund or estate, where his services have aided in creating, preserving, or protecting the fund or estate,[50] although some of the parties benefited opposed the suit, if they have accepted the benefits thereof.[51] On a creditors' bill or on a bill filed by a cestui que trust, to rescue trust property, the fees of the solicitor for complainant, accruing in the preparation and conduct of the suit to a decree of condemnation, or of rescue and restoration, will generally be charged on the fund, since, to this extent, the others having similar interests proportionally avail themselves of his labor and skill in discov-

As between remaindermen

Where a plaintiff remainderman procures a favorable decree in a federal court to determine and quiet title to his interest in trust property, defendant remaindermen, who seek distribution of their interests on the basis of the decree, and who on review question the court's refusal to protect their rights thereunder, and rely on such rights in a state court in resisting inheritance taxes, will be held to have accepted the benefits of the services of plaintiff's attorney, as regards the assessment of counsel fees against defendant remaindermen's interests—Wallace v. Fiske, (C.C.A.Mo.) 80 F (2d) 897.

As class suit

A remainderman's suit against fellow remaindermen and others to determine and quiet title to plaintiff's interest in trust property, although not starting as a class suit, becomes substantially a class suit by defendant remaindermen's accepting and claiming the benefits thereof, as regards the assessment of fees for plaintiff's attorney against defendant remaindermen's interests—Wallace v Fiske, (C C A Mo) 80 F (2d) 897.

Distinct from claim of client

An allowance to an attorney from the portions of other persons interested, who have accepted and enjoyed the benefits of his services, belongs to the attorney alone, and is a right which he may enforce directly and independently of his client—Wallace v. Fiske, (C C.A Mo.) 80 F. (2d) 897.

49. Wallace v. Fiske, supra.

Reason for rule

"The mere fact that a large percentage of those interested may have employed counsel, and may have opposed the suit whose institution has benefited them, will not prevent their interests from being subjected to the payment of reasonable compensation to counsel who have succeeded in recovering or preserving a fund which is brought into the custody of the court; for, 'if the class of persons among whom the fund will be distributed has been benefited by the suit, it makes no difference that some of them may have contested it; for it is the benefit conferred, and not the fact that all the beneficiaries may have agreed as to what was beneficial, that entitles counsel to compensation'".—Wallace v. Attorney for beneficiary of charitable trust

The fact that attorney's services, rendered for the beneficiaries of a charitable trust, are not for the benefit of the estate does not preclude the court from enforcing the payment of reasonable attorney's fees therefor, since, although any benefits to the estate therefrom are incidental to the attorney's primary duty to his clients and for the purpose of increasing the general corpus of the estate which passes to the clients as residuary legatees, payment of such fees from the estate funds inevitably comes from the residue to which the beneficiaries are entitled, and is solely from the clients' interest in the estate.—In re Abruzzo's Estate, 249 N Y.S. 72, 139 Misc 559.

51. Wallace v. Fiske, (C C.A.Mo) 80 F (2d) 897
"Allowances of this kind, if made with moderation and jealous regard to the rights of those who are interested in the fund, are not only admissible, but agreeable to the principles of equity and justice".—Wallace v. Fiske, (C C.A Mo) 80 F (2d) 897, 908—Tevander v. Ruysdael, (C. C.A Ill) 299 F 746, 748.

Other party taking advantage of decree

An attorney cannot be denied counsel fees for services in a suit to quiet title of remaindermen in properties of trust on the ground that he brought no fund into court which could be subjected to his demands against those remaindermen who asserted no rights in such suit, where the properties were in the hands of trustees and such remaindermen sought to take advantage of the decree—Wallace v. Fiske, (C.C. A Mo.) 80 F.(2d) 897.

ering and making it available.[52]

Counsel for a beneficiary cannot claim payment out of the estate,[53] although he may be paid out of his client's share,[54] unless it has been appropriated to a particular purpose,[55] or he may be paid from the portions of those beneficiaries who have joined in the proceedings, or who have acquiesced in the attorney's services.[56]

Allowance of an attorney's claim for compensation for services rendered to an estate will be considered in the title Executors and Administrators § 386, as will also the allowance of attorney's fees as expenses of administration in the same title § 388.

Individual contests. After the fund or property has been brought in and made available by the decree of the court, and nothing remains but its proper administration and distribution, contests which may arise between claimants, in respect to priorities or the right to share in the fund, are individual matters involving antagonistic interests, and the counsel fees of those conducting such contests cannot, therefore, be made a charge on the fund or on the property, but must be paid by the parties themselves.[57]

§ 194. Summary Remedies to Compel Payment

A summary remedy to compel the payment of an attorney's fees, ordinarily, is not available, except where there is a stipulation in the contract for such a remedy, where the amount of the fee is liquidated, or where a fund or property, subject to the payment of the fee, is in the custody and control of the court.

Since, ordinarily, as stated hereinafter, the recovery of an attorney's fee must be by an action (infra § 195), as in the case of any other contract, or by a suit in equity to enforce his attorney's lien (infra § 236), an attorney cannot generally have relief to compel payment of his fees by a summary proceeding or order in the cause in which the fees are earned,[58] and an application for summary relief, as between the attorney and client, can be resorted to, by way of exception to the general rule, only to quiet collateral controversies impeding the progress of the actual course of the litigation.[59] The amount of the compensation, generally, must be settled in a separate action or proceeding at law, and not in a summary proceeding in the action or suit in which the services are rendered,[60] except where power to do so is conferred on the court by a stipulation in the contract between the attorney and client,[61] or where, as has been considered

Appeal
Where the court, on a motion therefor, makes an order fixing an attorney's compensation for services in an action for death, the remedy of the guardian of the intestate's children is not by an independent motion to vacate the order, but by direct appeal—In re Atterbury, 113 N E 858, 222 N Y 355, reversing 167 N Y S. 88, 179 App Div. 643.

Court in which a suit is pending has no jurisdiction on intervention, petition, or motion of the attorney to determine what compensation the attorney has earned and to give judgment therefor against his client. —Universal Oil Products Co. v Standard Oil Co of Indiana, (D C Mo) 6 F Supp 37, affirmed (C C.A) German v Universal Oil Products Co, 77 F.(2d) 70.

heretofore (supra § 193), the attorney's services have brought a fund into the custody and control of a court of equity, in which case the court may in an ancillary proceeding award him a reasonable compensation, to be paid out of such fund,[62] and in such a case the application for such an allowance or award may be made either by the attorney himself or by the client for his benefit.[63]

An attorney may also resort to a summary remedy for his compensation, where the amount of his fee is liquidated,[64] or, where he has a lien on some article of value within the control of the court.[65]

This summary remedy, however, is discretionary, is always a subsidiary proceeding in the principal cause, and must be instituted while that cause is still pending.[66] In other words, an attorney may claim his fees out of money secured through his services only when the money has come into his possession, or when it has come within the grasp of the court.[67]

Generally, a claim for the allowance of counsel fees, in a case where such an allowance is proper, is presented informally by petition or motion, and without process or notice,[68] unless notice is required by statute.[69] There must, however, be adequate proof of the services and defenses,[70] and the court should take proof, or appoint an official referee to do so, of the nature of the services and their value and fix the compensation therefor.[71]

Validity and effect of stipulation

A stipulation in the contract to submit the question of the value of the attorney's services to the court at the conclusion of the action is valid and confers on the court by a supplemental proceeding in the action jurisdiction to hear and determine the matter—Eriksson v Boyum, 184 N.W. 961, 150 Minn 192

In liquidation proceeding

An attorney's application to have the liquidator of an insolvent insurance company pay the attorney his percentage fee on claims allowed in the liquidation proceeding should be made in the proceeding in which the liquidator was appointed, and leave to make such application granted—In re Finkelstein, 267 N.Y.S. 471, 149 Misc. 101.

Laches

Where a decree was procured in 1927 through the efforts of plaintiff remainderman's attorney in a suit to determine and quiet title to interest in trust property, an ancillary petition by the attorney in 1934 for the assessment of counsel fees against defendant remaindermen's interests is not barred by laches, where the petition was filed within six months after the supreme court's decision reviewing the decision of the circuit court of appeals in 1932, whereby potential concrete benefits to defendant remaindermen under the 1927 decree were first made apparent—Wallace v. Fiske, (C.C.A.Mo.) 80 F.(2d) 897.

Parties

Where an entire trust fund is brought into a court of equity and the chancellor is clothed with power to make orders incidental to its administration, the parties are not misjoined in an ancillary proceeding for counsel fees against remaindermen, notwithstanding their interests are in some respects distinct and separate—Wallace v. Fiske, (C.C.A.Mo.) 80 F.(2d) 897.

Against funds in hands of receiver

A petition for an allowance out of funds in the hands of the receiver for the fees of the attorneys for plaintiff, in an action by a creditor to wind up an insolvent corporation, may be made either by the plaintiff, in such action, or by the attorneys themselves—Bradshaw v. Little Rock Bank, 89 S.W. 816, 76 Ark. 501

Against persons accepting benefits

An application for an allowance of attorney's fees against persons accepting the benefits of his services in creating a fund, may be made by his client for the benefit of the attorney—Wallace v. Fiske, (C.C.A. Mo.) 80 F.(2d) 897

Jurisdiction

In a suit to determine and quiet title to plaintiff's remainder interest in the trust property, where the court's order directed the trustees to deliver to a life tenant's executor the property representing defendant remaindermen's interests, and to deliver into the court's registry cash or property in a specified amount, and reserved jurisdiction thereover to protect tax liability and solicitor's lien, the court is not divested of jurisdiction over the fund subject to assessment of counsel fees for services of plaintiff's attorney beneficial to defendant remaindermen—Wallace v. (1) Under a statute forbidding any allowance of counsel fees from money or property under the control of the court, unless claim therefor be stated in the bill, petition, or other proceeding of which the interested parties shall have due notice, or unless due notice of application therefor be first given, an order for compensation to an attorney for the administrator, who was also attorney for certain creditors, in a creditors' suit against the estate, was unauthorized where the required notice was not given—Mann v Bradshaw's Adm'r, 118 S.E. 326, 136 Va. 351

(2) An attorney's application to have the liquidator of an insolvent insurance company pay the attorney his percentage fee on claims allowed in a liquidation proceeding could not be adjudicated, in the absence of notice to claimants, notwithstanding the attorney's alleged ignorance of claimants' whereabouts—In re Finkelstein, 267 N.Y.S. 471, 149 Misc. 101.

Jurisdiction to order reference

In an action involving the question whether a will created a trust, a judge, holding court in a circuit other than the one in which the cause was pending, has no jurisdiction, in the absence of the executors' consent,

Against associate attorney. One attorney is not entitled on a summary application to compel the payment to him by another attorney of a portion of the fees or of the costs received in an action.[72]

Against defendant. A summary proceeding will not lie to enforce an agreement whereby a defendant, as part of a compromise, promised to pay plaintiff's attorney his costs and fee.[73]

After termination of relation. The termination by an attorney, without sufficient cause, of the relation of attorney and client relegates him to ordinary remedies to compel payment for his services; and the court may not secure payment by application of any remedy dependent on the relation of attorney and client.[74]

§ 195. Actions for Compensation

An attorney may by action sue to recover his compensation and fees.

Attorneys may sue to recover their fees.[75] As will be noticed hereinafter, the proper form of procedure for an attorney to compel payment of his compensation is, generally, by an action at law on the contract of employment (infra § 197), or by a suit in equity to enforce the attorney's lien (infra § 236). He may state a cause of action for a money judgment on account of services rendered and money advanced, although the purpose is to foreclose an attorney's lien, the existence of which is open to doubt or denial;[76] he may bring an action against his client for fees earned in the trial of a former action, and may obtain a judgment and collect the same by execution, levy, and the sale of property to pay the judgment.[77] If he is discharged without cause, as a general rule, he may recover on a quantum meruit the reasonable value of his services or he may sue for damages for the breach of contract (supra § 169); and, where plaintiff's statements show either that defendant has made it impossible for plaintiff to perform his contract, or that plaintiff was improperly discharged, an action to recover as for performance of the contract may be dismissed.[78]

Against adverse party. Where an attorney seeks to recover his compensation from the adverse party after a settlement has been made without his knowledge, the proper procedure is for him to file a petition, and have a trial in open court, or by reference in the usual way, of the issues raised by the adverse party's answer.[79]

§ 196. —— Defenses

A client, when sued for his attorney's compensation, may set up defenses which show that the attorney has not earned, or otherwise is not entitled to, the compensation sued for.

In an action by an attorney for compensation for services rendered, it is a good defense that the attorney also acted for the adverse party, who had conflicting interests in the subject matter (supra § 167); that the contract, under which the services were performed, was illegal, as being contrary to public policy or good morals (supra § 181); that the attorney was guilty of culpable negligence in the discharge of his duties (supra § 167); and in an action on a quantum meruit, that the services rendered were of no value to defendant,[80] or that he had been paid his compensation in full, as fixed by contract, and that no additional services had been rendered.[81] In an action for attorney's fees

On withdrawal

An attorney, whose notice to his client to retain another attorney is disregarded, is not entitled to an order fixing his compensation and permitting him to withdraw—Seleznow v. Shub, 240 N.Y.S. 829, 136 Misc. 365.

75. Levin v. Suffrin, (La.App.) 167 So. 911, 913.

"We have come a long way since the conception of lawyers' fees as gifts by grateful clients. Perhaps, the struggle for place and power under modern conditions has dulled the finer sensibilities responsive to moral obligations, or it may be that the modern lawyer requires more of that which 'makes the mare go' than his predecessor and insists upon more certain revenues, for individuals, like Republics, are frequently ungrateful. However that may be, lawyers may now sue for their fees with impunity."—Levin v. Suffrin, supra.

Services under invalid contract

Where, in an action by an attorney to recover on a quantum meruit for services rendered at the request of defendant, it was alleged, as a defense, that a portion of such services were performed under a special contract, by the terms of which plaintiff agreed to commence and to prosecute at his own expense certain actions for defendant on a contingent fee basis, and that, in the event he should be unsuccessful, he should receive no compensation for his services, and that he was unsuccessful in such litigation, on the trial it was error to strike, on plaintiff's motion, such defense from the answer and reject proof of the matters thus pleaded—Freerks v. Nurnberg, 157 N.W. 119, 33 N.D. 587.

81. Miller v. Wing, 50 P.(2d) 470, 9 Cal.App.(2d) 483.

for services in obtaining a sheriff's deed, the fact that the client in a prior action to quiet title had relied on a judgment requiring the execution of such a deed, does not preclude him from setting up that the judgment was later vacated.[82] Where the attorney's compensation is to be a certain per cent of the property recovered, a failure to assert his interest in the property in the action in which it is recovered does not preclude his subsequent recovery for services rendered under the contract.[83] However, where a husband devised a homestead to his wife, in a jurisdiction permitting such a devise, and otherwise provided for her, the wife's attorney, who, intending to contest the validity of the devise of the homestead, contracted to accept one half of the amount recovered for the wife above the amount received by her under the will, could not recover from the wife of the testator's son on the ground that the wife by deeding the homestead to the son prevented the attorney's recovery for the wife.[84]

It is no defense to an action by an attorney for services rendered, that he has failed to perform some service which is not within his contractual duties;[85] and in an action on a quantum meruit for the value of services rendered, the contract under which the attorney was employed having been repudiated by the client, it is no defense that services called for by the contract had not been performed.[86] Where the action is on an express contract, it is no defense that defendant has been required to make payments which are not germane to the contract.[87] It is no defense to an attorney's claim for his fees for protecting his client's interest in a trust fund, invested in property on which there is a mortgage in which the trustee is interested, that a foreclosure action is still pending.[88] One who employs the services of an attorney in the subject matter of which others are interested cannot avoid or apportion his personal liability unless he discloses their names, although he may have informed the attorney that others were interested.[89] The fact that the attorney has successfully established his client's title to property does not estop him from asserting an interest therein pursuant to the contract of employment, by which he was to have a certain percentage of whatever property might be recovered.[90] An attorney was held not precluded from the collection of a fee due from a client on the ground that the attorney was enriched by fees paid him for defending the client in a conspiracy proceeding, which prevented the client from responding in full under an accounting to persons resisting the payment of the fees, where the attorney was not a party to the proceeding assailed and had earned the fees for which the claim was made under the contract with the client.[91]

§ 197. —— Form of Action

An attorney, seeking to recover the fees or compensation due him, should proceed, generally, by an action at law; and not by a suit in equity, unless special circumstances give a court of equity jurisdiction.

As an attorney's claim for fees arises ex contractu, the proper form of action by which to enforce payment, generally, is by an action at law on the contract,[92] such as by an action of assumpsit,[93]

Dispute as to amount of fees

Where the client advanced the attorney various sums of money on the understanding that such sums were to be paid from fees allotted to the attorney from a fund paid into the registry of the court for the client, and a dispute arose as to the amount of the fees, the attorney should resort to an action at law to determine whether he has a claim for services against the client and the amount due therefor—Campbell v. Money had and received. Where moneys to which the attorney is equitably entitled have come into the hands of the client, the former may sue as for money had and received;[95] but there can be no recovery on the ground of money had and received by one attorney for the use of another attorney, where the money was paid and received as the money of the attorney receiving it.[96]

Suit in equity. Except in case of the enforcement of an attorney's lien (infra § 236), a suit in equity is available to enforce payment of an attorney's compensation, only where special circumstances are present which give a court of equity jurisdiction,[97] as where the agreement between the parties amounts to an equitable assignment,[98] or where the cause of action for compensation is consolidated with other chancery causes,[99] or where an accounting is contemplated or involved.[1]

An attorney who contracts to receive, as his compensation, a certain part of the property or thing recovered, or a certain amount of specified property, and who has no adequate remedy at law, such as for damages for the breach of the contract, may sue for specific performance of the contract, to recover the property or thing specified, as his compensation.[2]

Counterclaim. An attorney may also recover his compensation by setting up his claim therefor by a counterclaim in an action against him by his client for an accounting.[3]

Suit by attorney for share of fees

A suit for an accounting and recovery of a share of the legal fees received, based on a joint contract between plaintiff and a third party and defendant, is maintainable in equity, on the theory that one of two joint obligees cannot bring an action at law.—Cochran v. Burdick, 63 App.D.C. 150, 70 F.(2d) 754, certiorari denied Burdick v. Cochran, 55 S.Ct. 73, 293 U.S. 561, 79 L.Ed. 661.

Burdick, 63 App.D.C. 150, 70 F.(2d) 754, certiorari denied Burdick v. Cochran, 55 S.Ct. 73, 293 U.S. 561, 79 L.Ed. 661.

Dispute as to value of property

Where the value of the property recovered is disputed and no provision is made to determine it, an attorney who has contracted to receive one third of whatever should be recovered has no adequate remedy at law which would defeat his right to specific performance.—Gates v. McLaulin, 165 N.W. 614, 199 Mich. 438.

Suggestion of reason for inadequacy of law remedy

An attorney is not entitled to specific performance of a contract to convey an interest in land as a contingent fee for its recovery without suggesting some reason why a recovery of damages for breach of the contract would not give adequate relief.—McCall v. Atchley, 164 S.W. 593, 256 Mo. 39.

Counterclaim for fees and disbursements

Where, in a client's action against his attorney for an accounting, the attorney files a counterclaim for fees and disbursements, he is entitled to payment of notes given for services for an amount allowed by court, but not to payment of a claim for additional compensation not made until after the client's action or claim for further alleged disbursements.—Davitt v. O'Connor, (C.C.A.N.Y.) 73 F.(2d) 43, certiorari denied O'Connor v. Davitt, 55 S.Ct. 217, 293 U.S. 621, 79 L.Ed. 709.

attorney appointed by him to render services to a pauper defendant in a criminal case, the attorney cannot recover on a formal complaint against the county for such services as on a contract.[4]

§ 198. —— Conditions Precedent

A claim or demand by an attorney for his fees and charges, and, when required by statute, the service of a bill therefor on the client, are generally conditions precedent to the bringing of an action for such fees and charges.

Before bringing an action for his fees, charges, and disbursements, an attorney, in the absence of a statutory provision otherwise, must make a claim or demand therefor,[5] and, when required by statute, he must serve a copy of his bill for such fees, charges, and disbursements on his client.[6] The requirement of the service of such a bill, however, has been held not to apply to charges for services rendered in a foreign state by an attorney of that state to a client residing in the local state, where recovery is sought,[7] or to charges for services not connected with the conduct of litigation,[8] such as for conveyancing only;[9] and although the service of the bill is nugatory as to services connected with litigation, recovery may be had for other items contained therein.[10]

An action against a trustee on his independent obligation to pay the reasonable value of the attorney's services to the client, may be maintained without any claim having been made against the client's estate.[11]

A statute requiring the officers of an association to secure the approval of a specified commissioner before paying a claim against it, does not require an attorney to secure such approval before suing such association for his bill for services rendered to it.[12]

§ 199. —— Time to Sue and Limitations

An attorney's right of action for fees or compensation, generally, accrues on his performance of the services contemplated by his contract, the happening of the contingency on which the compensation is to be paid, or on the premature termination of the relation, and is barred by his failure to sue within the time limited by statute.

An attorney's right of action for compensation, generally, accrues at the time the services contemplated by his contract of employment have been substantially performed,[13] or, where the compensation is to be paid on a certain contingency, on the happening of the contingency[14] If the attorney acts under a general retainer, the contract is generally considered an entire one, and the right of action for compensation does not arise until the proceedings have been brought to some conclusion, and the relation of attorney and client has been terminated,[15] or, where it is stipulated that the

In New Jersey

(1) Under Pract Act (1903) § 9 (3 Comp St [1910] p 4054), as amended by P L (1911) p 412 (2 Comp St Suppl [1924] p 2793 § 163—9), an advocate or counselor has the right to sue on an implied contract for the reasonable value of services rendered after giving his client a copy of his bill for such fees, charges, and disbursements.—Le Duc v. Williams, 145 A 325, 7 N J Misc 342, affirmed 148 A 919, 106 N J Law 247.

(2) Under this statute, as it read before amendment, the attorney was required, as a condition precedent, to serve a copy of the taxed bill of such fees, charges, and disbursements to the party to be charged, and, on application of such party to the proper judge and on his submission to pay the sum found due on taxation, the same was referred to the proper taxing officer, and the amount found by him bound the parties.—Brown v Harriot, 80 A. 479, 81 N J Law 484—6 C J p 756 note 7.

Settlement

(1) Plaintiff attorney's cause of action under his contract to sue for property, whereby defendant contracted to pay him for his services one fourth of what might be recovered by suit or settlement, arose when defendant by herself settled the suit, receiving a certain amount of money, so that plaintiff need not show when defendant's interest would have been recovered.—Amick v. Henman, (Mo App.) 241 S W. 983

(2) An attorney may enforce by independent suit for breach of contract, as against his client, a claim for compensation for legal services rendered in a case begun in court, partially prosecuted, and settled before final judgment or decree.—Universal Oil Products Co v Standard Oil Co of Indiana, (D C Mo.) 6 F. Supp 37, affirmed (C.C.A.) German v Universal Oil Products Co., 77 F. (2d) 70.

attorney shall collect the judgment, until the collection has been made[16]

Unless he has contracted for a fixed sum for conducting the proceedings to the termination, however, he may be entitled to compensation, from time to time, for services rendered,[17] and where the separate steps of a single proceeding are taken under separate contracts, the cause of action is complete as soon as each contract has been performed.[18] A demand note for fees may be sued on before the termination of the proceedings in which the services were agreed to be rendered.[19]

Premature termination of relation. Where there is no special agreement which prevents the death of either party from terminating the relation, the right of action accrues at once on the death of either attorney or client,[20] or where unforeseen circumstances arise which render it impossible for the attorney to carry out his agreement[21] So, also, a cause of action in favor of the attorney accrues at once where the contract of employment is violated by the client,[22] as by the wrongful discharge of the attorney,[23] and the fact that the attorney does not await the final results of efforts of other counsel, and possibly the running of the statute of limitations, to demand compensation for work accomplished does not bar his suit for reasonable fees.[24]

Premature action. An action for an attorney's fees, under a contract making the payment thereof dependent on a favorable outcome of the action in which the services are rendered, is premature if brought pending an appeal[25] Premature commencement of suit, however, will not bar a subsequent action.[26]

Limitation. An attorney's right of action for compensation may be barred by his failure to bring it within the time prescribed therefor by statute.[27]

§ 200. —— Jurisdiction and Venue

Except in so far as regulated by special statutory provision, the rules which control in other civil actions, as considered in other articles in this work, apply as to the jurisdiction, see Courts § 41 [15 C.J. p 739 notes 38–41], and as to the venue see Venue § 14 [67 C.J. p 36 notes 82–89], of an action by an attorney for the recovery of his compensation.

§ 201. —— Process and Appearance

In the absence of special statutory provisions, the rules which govern in other civil actions on contracts, as considered in other articles in this work, apply in reference to the process (see Process) and appearance (see Appearances) in an action by an attorney to recover his fees or compensation.

§ 202. —— Parties

As in other civil cases, a person is a proper or necessary party to an action for services rendered by an attorney, according to his being a party to the contract of employment, or having a remedial interest in the cause of action or matter of defense.

Two attorneys, not partners, employed by the same client under separate contracts, cannot jointly sue for their services.[28] This rule, however, does not apply where one attorney is employed by the principal attorney under authority from his client,[29] and where one member of a partnership renders services without an understanding as to whether he alone, or the firm of which he is a

Action by the assignee of an attorney's claim for services in defending an action, under a contract for payment if the attorney should defeat the action and prevent recovery, or if as a result of the action a lesser amount should be recovered than that claimed, is prematurely brought pending an appeal in the action from a judgment for defendant; for until a final judgment on appeal has been obtained in favor of defendant, or until the case is otherwise finally determined in his favor, or a judgment has become final for a lesser amount than that prayed for in the action, the attorney has not defeated the action or prevented a recovery.—Cuneo v. member, is retained, it seems that suit may be brought either in the name of the individual partner,[30] or in the names of all the partners composing the firm of which the individual attorney so retained is a member.[31] One member of a firm of attorneys, who have an agreement between themselves that claims for moneys laid out for expenses in and about the business of firm clients shall not be a partnership asset, but shall remain the individual property of the partner making the expenditure, may maintain an action in his own name for such expenditures, in the absence of a showing by the client of some injury which would thereby result to him.[32] A surviving partner who continues practice under the same firm name, after the death of his copartner, may sue for services rendered under a contract made by the firm before such death.[33] In an action by a firm of attorneys, another attorney who is in partnership with plaintiffs in another firm, is not a necessary or proper party.[34]

Intervention. An attorney, employed by the principal attorney to assist in litigation for a share of the compensation under an agreement giving him an interest in the subject matter, may intervene as a party in an action by the principal attorney for his compensation.[35]

Defendant. Ordinarily, the employer or employers if there are more than one, should be made party or parties defendant to the suit.[36] Where several guardians assume the position successively, however, only the last need be made a party, although when the services are rendered, the earlier ones have charge of the estate.[37] The fact that the instrument on which the original action was brought was signed by the client for himself and others does not make another a necessary party to the attorney's suit against his client for his fees.[38] Where an attorney seeks to recover his compensation out of a fund which has been pledged to another, the pledgee is a proper party to the action,[39] but creditors, whom the attorney was to pay out of funds secured by him for his client, are not necessary parties to the attorney's suit against the client for services rendered in connection with the funds.[40]

§ 203. —— Pleading

a. Complaint, declaration, or petition
b. Plea or answer
c. Issues, proof, and variance

a. Complaint, Declaration, or Petition

A complaint, declaration, or petition by an attorney for fees or compensation must allege all facts necessary to constitute his cause of action, including the fact and nature of the contract of employment, and that plaintiff performed, or was excused from performance of, the obligations or services therein assumed.

The complaint, declaration, or petition in an action by an attorney to recover for services rendered must show a necessary party defendant,[41] and must allege all the facts necessary to constitute his cause of action, that is, all facts necessary to show defendant's liability to him for the fees or services in question.[42] It should allege facts show-

In action for accounting

Where attorneys are employed under an agreement whereby they are to receive one fourth of the money and property recovered in a litigation, an attorney, employed by them to assist in such litigation for an equal share with them in the money and property received through the litigation, is entitled to intervene as a party in an action for an accounting by the principal attorneys against the client; particularly, under a statutory provision that any person who has an interest in the subject matter of a suit which can be affected by judgment may, on leave, intervene in such suit or proceeding at any time before the trial—Barnes v Shattuck, 114 P. 952, 13 Ariz 338, affirmed Barnes v. Accounting between attorneys

A bill by a lawyer against another lawyer formerly employed by plaintiff, stating facts involving a joint venture or quasi partnership in the practice of law, and hence showing that a fiduciary relation existed, and seeking an accounting by defendant as to cases the fees for which he was to share with plaintiff, and seeking to have liens impressed on certain matters and cases which defending a valid contract of employment, and the nature thereof,[43] the subject matter to which it was related or limited,[44] the performance of any conditions precedent,[45] and that plaintiff performed, or was excused from performance of, the obligations or services therein assumed,[46] or that he performed other services in lieu of or in substitution thereof, with the agreement and understanding on the part of defendant that they should take the place of those contracted for and be compensated for in the same manner.[47]

It is not necessary that the facts be alleged in detail or according to strict rules of pleading, but only that they be stated in ordinary and concise language and in such a manner as to enable what was intended to be understood.[48] If the action ant took away with him, states a case for an equitable accounting—O'Brien v. Mackey, (D.C.N.Y.) 36 F.(2d) 39.

Against intervener

Allegations that plaintiff had performed services as counsel in cases in which defendant had intervened, thereby engaging his services and availing themselves of his previous services, and that thereafter defendants received payment in full of the judgment in favor of their testator, which had given them their status as interveners, thereby becoming indebted to plaintiff for the reasonable value of his services, is subject to general demurrer as not stating a cause of action, since there was no averment that defendants received payment of their judgment in consequence of their intervention, or out of the fund which plaintiff had been the means of securing—Gilliam v. Pirkey, 175 S.W. 216, 189 Mo.App. 691.

When action against client's opponent

In an action against defendant to recover one third of the amount paid by defendant to the client by attorneys, who had been assigned a one third interest in a cause of action against defendant in order to secure their services, it was not necessary to plead and prove all the facts which would have been necessary in the original action to entitle their client to recover—Wichita Falls Electric Co. v. Chancellor & Bryan, (Tex.Civ.App.) 229 S.W. 649, error refused.

Allegations held sufficient to state cause of action

(1) In an action for attorney fees from a corporation in which the attorney was a stockholder—Merchants' Ice Co. v. Scott & Dodson, (Tex.Civ.App.) 186 S.W. 418, error refused.

(2) In a suit alleging a contract with defendant's authorized agent, in performance of which plaintiff rendered certain services of certain alleged value, which were accepted by defendant—Knights of the Ku Klux Klan v. Terrell, 123 S.E. 906, 32 Ga.App. 476.

(3) In a suit for the reasonable value of services in a divorce suit and negotiating alimony settlement, not to show that the services were gratuitous and voluntary—Fleming v. Phinizy, 134 S.E. 814, 35 Ga.App. 792.

Bill on assignment of interest in estate

A bill in an attorney's action on an assignment of part of an estate which alleges that the assignment had been made in consideration of services rendered and to be rendered in the matter of the estate, and in further consideration of plaintiff's agreement to pay out of the fund assigned certain debts of the assignor, is not demurrable—Smith v. Weeks, 147 N.E. 676, 252 Mass. 244.

For breach of exclusive employment

A complaint alleging that defendant agreed to employ plaintiff, and no one else, as attorney and counsel on all legal matters affecting the business of defendant and all subsidiary corporations owned by it, as long as plaintiff owns a single share of defendant's stock, and to pay him a fair and reasonable compensation for all services "if, when, and as rendered," and that defendant employed another to perform some of such services, does not state a cause of action, in the absence of an allegation that he changed his position, or incurred expense, or was employed under a general retainer for a definite period—Boehm v. United Power Laundries, 229 N.Y.S. 430, 132 Misc. 1.

43. Union School Tp. of St. Joseph County v. Moon, 187 N.E. 332, 205 Ind. 514.

Services for corporation

An attorney's allegation that the legal services were in connection with the corporation's organization and operation indicated in itself that the employment was for the corporation, not a stockholder personally—Massey v. Murray, 135 So. 738, 17 La.App. 319.

As real estate broker

A petition for the recovery of an amount claimed to be due for services rendered as an attorney, alleging that plaintiff in connection with a sale of land was to render professional services in clearing title and finding a purchaser therefor, does not show that he rendered the services as a real estate broker or salesman within the meaning of a statute requiring a license therefor, and is not subject to such objection.—Layne v. Henderson, 121 So. 313, 9 La.App. 452.

Complaint held insufficient

(1) As not showing that the attorney gave his client such full information and advice as to enable her to act understandingly and freely.—Coleman v. Sisson, 230 P. 582, 71 Mont. 435.

(2) For want of particularity as to the time and character of the services. Austin v. Conner & McRae, (Tex.Civ.App.) 288 S.W. 552.

"Instrumental" service

A petition in an action for fees under a contract whereby the attorney agreed with a guardian to bring suit to obtain a sale of the ward's land offered to a veteran's hospital board, which averred that the title was obtained by condemnation and did not allege that the attorney did anything except that he was "instrumental" in procuring a favorable price, does not state a cause of action—Cooper's Adm'x v. McCoy, 272 S.W. 428, 209 Ky. 205.

Securing benefits

In an action on a contract for a percentage of any benefits secured by or resulting from the attorney's services, from a residuary legatee or her estate, whether by legacy or otherwise, a declaration not averring that a legacy received by defendant was actually secured by plaintiff's efforts is defective, notwithstanding a contract provision that any benefit in the form of a legacy or otherwise should be construed to be from plaintiff's efforts—Sloan v. Thompson, 58 App.D.C. 318, 30 F.(2d) 560.

47. Cooper's Adm'x v. McCoy, 272 S.W. 428, 209 Ky. 205.

is for reasonable fees, after a discharge or prevention of full performance by the client, the complaint need not allege that plaintiff had duly performed all conditions, but is sufficient if it alleges the services that have been performed and the fact of the discharge;[49] and, in such a case, such prevention of performance should be alleged,[50] and in some states the attorney need not allege the reasonable value of the services he was not permitted to perform, but may count on the contract.[51]

If the attorney sues on an express contract, he should set out the contract, at least in substance, in his pleading and not merely as an exhibit.[52] In the absence of an express agreement he should allege that the services were rendered at defendant's request,[53] that defendant ratified his acts, or that the services rendered without the latter's knowledge were necessary, stating facts showing such necessity.[54]

Statement of charges. With respect to the statement of charges, it is sufficient for the complaint to show the dates of the different services,[55] or the reasonable value[56] and nonpayment thereof,[57] even though it does not allege when the amount claimed fell due,[58] and it may be unnecessary to allege a demand for payment[59] or a promise to pay.[60] If the attorney, under a general retainer, advises his client or performs services in a number of distinct matters, he may be required to itemize his charges;[61] but if the services all relate to one subject matter he need not separate the transaction into parts and state what charge he makes for each separate part,[62] although he may be required to state separately amounts charged as expenses.[63]

License of attorney. Plaintiff need not allege that he was licensed to practice law in the state as a prerequisite to the right to recover for services rendered.[64]

An attorney of another state, seeking to recover for services rendered in such state, must allege and prove that under the law thereof an action can be maintained for such services.[65]

b. Plea or Answer

The plea or answer must either deny the facts pleaded by the attorney, or specifically set up facts showing an affirmative defense.

The plea, answer, or affidavit of defense must contain either an express denial of the state of facts pleaded by plaintiff,[66] or it must specifically allege facts showing an affirmative defense.[67] Allegations that the attorney's services were not satisfactory must be specific and show wherein there was any want of skill or any mismanagement to the detriment of defendant,[68] and an averment, in an affidavit of defense, that the attorney's services were not worth the amount asked is insufficient where no attempt is made to aver how much they were actually worth.[69]

The defense of the discharge of the attorney must be pleaded by confession and avoidance, and cannot be set up under an answer denying the contract of employment.[70]

A partial defense must be pleaded as such and not as a complete defense;[71] and where matter is set up as a counterclaim or set-off it must be specially pleaded,[72] and must be specific and precise as to the source, character, and amount of the set-offs.[73]

Consistency of defenses. An averment in the answer that defendant had paid plaintiff in full is not inconsistent with a general denial also contained therein;[74] and an answer setting up payment and waiver of lien is not redundant, and, although setting up matters accruing after the suit is brought, may be allowed to stand.[75]

Amendment. The answer may be amended provided it does not change the defense.[76]

c. Issues, Proof, and Variance

(1) In general
(2) Under general denial
(3) Variance

(1) In General

In an action for the recovery of an attorney's fees or compensation, such matters only may be considered and evidence admitted thereon as are put in issue by the pleadings.

In an action for the recovery of an attorney's fees or compensation such matters only may be considered as to the cause of action or matter of defense, as the case may be, and the evidence admitted, as are put in issue by the pleadings.[77]

If the attorney declares on an express contract for a specified fee, no recovery can be predicated

72. Martin v Nichols, 188 P. 519, 110 Wash 451

Counterclaim held insufficient

A counterclaim for a premium paid for an unnecessary bond, which the attorney had erroneously induced defendant to execute, and for the attorney's fee, paid for having such bond quashed, is properly dismissed where the counterclaim does not allege that the attorney acted fraudulently or that he had received any benefits except his commission as the bonding company's agent—Cooper's Adm'x v. McCoy, 272 S W. 428, 209 Ky 205

Money paid for answer not interposed

In an action for legal services, wherein defendant alleged as a counterclaim that he had retained plaintiff to interpose an answer in a certain lawsuit and had paid him five dollars therefor, and that plaintiff had failed to interpose such answer, whereby judgment was entered against defendant, such answer constituted a sufficient counterclaim for the five dollars paid, although not as to the amount for which judgment was rendered—Martin v. Nichols, 188 P 519, 110 Wash 451.

Alleging fraud

Where, in an action on notes given attorneys for contemplated services, defendants' answer alleging no consideration was demurred to, a proposed amendment alleging that plaintiffs perpetrated a fraud on defendants in inducing them to execute the notes and were also guilty of undue influence does not constitute a departure, and should be allowed, under a statute providing that, if the court sustains a demurrer, the party may amend and under the general rule permitting parties to amend after the sustaining of a demurrer almost as a matter of course—Dickerson v. Hamby & Haynie, 131 S W. 674, 96 Ark. 163.

Action between attorneys

Where plaintiff and defendant, attorneys, were employed in an action to recover land, and the client was to pay one quarter of the value of the land recovered, and, after recovery, conveyed one quarter of the land to defendant, and plaintiff sued to recover a one-half interest therein, wherein defendant denied plaintiff's interest, defendant's evidence that the land was conveyed for services rendered by him, and not under a contract of employment, was within the issues and competent, and its exclusion was prejudicial error—Lamb v. Alexander, 179 P. 587, 74 Okl 250.

Client's mental condition

In an action by attorneys against a railroad company to recover fees agreed to be paid by the railroad company in a release to their client, where there was no issue in the pleadings as to the client's mental condition when he executed the release, it was not error to exclude the answer to a question of a physician as to the client's mental condition at such time—Mytton v Missouri Pac. R. Co, (Mo App) 211 S W. 111.

Contingent fee issue

Where the complaint alleges that the fees were in part agreed on and asks for a reasonable value of the balance, an answer generally denying the allegations of the complaint "except as hereinafter alleged," and then alleging that the services were rendered on a contingent fee and no damages were recovered, is sufficient to raise the issue that plaintiff was employed on a contingent fee contract—Oliver v. Crane, 161 P. 254, 82 Or. 166.

Evidence held not within issues.—Hannon v. Goucher, 4 P (2d) 239, 117 Cal App. 455—Modern Woodmen of America v Arnkens, 192 N E. 706, 99 Ind App. 344—Winslow v Atz, 177 A 272, 168 Md 230—Wright v. Joyce, 253 P. 810, 142 Wash. 486.

on the reasonable value of services, and evidence of such value is immaterial and inadmissible,[78] unless the complaint is amended to cover such theory;[79] and the theory of the complaint, in such a case, is not changed to a quantum meruit by an added allegation that the amount specified is a reasonable fee for such services.[80] So, also, under such a declaration proof is not admissible of a contract for a contingent fee, a wrongful discharge, and the happening of the contingency.[81]

On the other hand, if the pleadings are on the theory of the reasonable value of the attorney's services, recovery cannot be predicated on an express contract between the attorney and client, and evidence of such a contract is generally inadmissible;[82] and, where the case proceeds on the theory that plaintiff was employed without any definite amount being fixed as compensation, that he states in his complaint the contract of employment and gives in detail all the circumstances relating thereto does not deprive him of a recovery in quantum meruit.[83]

Where reasonable value is in issue, the attorney may, in proving such value, include the amount of a reasonable retainer, although no charge for retainer is pleaded,[84] in which case, the bill of items not being objected to, evidence of services rendered as affecting such value would not be improper.[85] Where there is a dispute as to whether the services were within the terms of the attorney's employment, evidence may be admitted as to the value of the services under both views of the question,[86]

Exorbitant and excessive charges

In a suit by attorneys, on an account stated, to recover for professional services performed, the client may be permitted to prove that the charges are exorbitant and excessive, are not warranted by custom and usage, and are otherwise unfair and unreasonable—Henry v. Le Moyne, 219 Ill App 313.

Full performance prevented

(1) In an action by an attorney to recover on a contract, full performance of which has been prevented by his client, recovery should be sought on that theory, rather than on the theory of full performance—Neeper v Heinbach, (Mo App) 249 S W. 440

(2) Where a written contract for attorney's services and his compensation therefor was abandoned by the parties before the service was completely rendered, evidence of the value of the services which had been rendered is admissible—Ownbey v Silverstein, 194 P 607, 69 Colo 325

Proof of expenditures by the attorney, in an action by him employed on a contingent fee and discharged by the client, does not support a recovery, where the case is tried on the theory that plaintiff can recover on the contract, and it is expressly stated that plaintiff is not seeking to collect such expenditures as special damages—Ramey v. Graves, 191 P. 801, 112 Wash 88.

Rights of third person

In an action by an attorney for services rendered in connection with foreclosing mortgages and selling real estate covered thereby, rights of the mortgagor in such foreclosure and to any equities that may have resulted therefrom in the execution of the court's decree are not litigable issues—Ex parte Yarbrough, 118 So. 670, 218 Ala. 461, granting certiorari Massey v. For contingent fee

Where the complaint pleads only an express agreement for a contingent fee, and contains no quantum meruit count, plaintiff's right to recover is limited to the agreement, and no recovery can be predicated on the value of the services—Galligan v. Bua, 236 P. 1016, 77 Colo. 386

"To plead a specific contract of employment calling for legal services at a fixed price and fully performed, then undertake to sustain it by proof of a contract for a contingent fee, a wrongful discharge of the attorney, and the later happening of the contingency, is to substitute an entirely new issue for the one pleaded, and such action, if allowed, would in all probability work an injustice to the defendant by prejudicing his right to defend against the extraneous issue"—Kirk v Culley, 261 P. 994, 996, 202 Cal 501.

Allegations permitting recovery on quantum meruit

Under an answer alleging that the fee was to be a reasonable amount fixed by the client, it was the duty of the client to fix a reasonable sum in good faith, and a verdict for plaintiff as on a quantum meruit because of the bad faith of the client in fixing the fee is not invalid on the ground that, having failed to allege fraud, plaintiff could not recover therefor, since under the presumed denial by plaintiff of the new matter set up in the answer, bad faith could be established—Foster v. Young, 156 P 476, 172 Cal. 317

Within or without express terms

Where there is a dispute as to whether or not the services claimed to have been rendered were within the express terms of the attorney's employment, evidence of qualified persons as to the reasonable value of plaintiff's services, on the hypothesis that he was employed to and did perform all the services claimed by him, and also on the hypothesis that he was employed to render only such or, where the different parties contend for the admission of evidence on the value of services on different theories, the court may sustain the admission of evidence on the theory it decides to be correct and overrule it on the other.[87]

Where the action is based on a contingent fee contract, evidence is admissible to show that the services were to be gratuitous unless a certain result was obtained.[88]

Extra services. Where in an action for services performed under a contract, the performance of extra services is alleged, recovery may be had therefor, and is not limited to the services contemplated by the contract.[89]

Under admission in answer. An admission in the answer that the alleged services were rendered, accompanied by a denial of their value as claimed, does not entitle plaintiff to a judgment for the amount claimed by him.[90]

(2) Under General Denial

Under a general denial defendant may show the illegality of the contract of employment, the nonperformance or improper performance of the services sued for, and matter in mitigation, or diminution of the amount of recovery.

Under a general denial defendant may show that the contract sued on was illegal,[91] that the services were rendered by another attorney,[92] and, as has been held, that they had been paid for.[93] Matter in mitigation of damages may also be shown under a general denial.[94] Defendant, however, cannot show that after the performance of the services it was agreed that plaintiff's compensation should be a certain amount, this being new affirmative matter.[95]

Bad faith. Bad faith on the part of an attorney as a defense in an action for his fees is unavailable unless specially pleaded.[96]

Negligence. As a general rule, negligence on the part of the attorney may be set up as a defense under the general issue,[97] although it has been held that negligence of the attorney in the course of his employment is the subject of a cross action merely, unless such negligence entirely frustrated the object for which he was employed, in which latter case only could it be shown under a plea of general denial,[98] and that if it is set up merely in mitigation or diminution of the value of the attorney's services, notice must be given with the general issue.[99] Where plaintiff was employed to render assistance as he should consider necessary to defendant's trial attorney, defendant cannot under a plea of nonperformance show that plaintiff was absent during the trial, although plaintiff must prove that he rendered all services that he in good faith considered necessary.[1]

(3) Variance

Unless the facts introduced in evidence by plaintiff substantially sustain the facts alleged as constituting his cause of action for compensation, there is a variance.

Proof of a contract for a specific fee is a variance, where the issue is the value of the services,[2] and proof of breach of contract by the client by which the attorney was prevented from rendering service is a variance from a petition demanding compensation for services rendered.[3] There is no variance, however, where the attorney's cause of action is substantially proved as alleged,[4] and it has been held that the fact that an attorney in services as he was directed by defendant to perform, is admissible—Adams Express Co v. James, 175 S. W. 1012, 164 Ky 484.

89. Mecartney v. Guardian Trust Co, 202 S W. 1131, 274 Mo. 224

Other cases and controversies

In an attorney's action for compensation, an allegation that there were several other court cases and controversies which grew out of the litigation for which he was hired, in which plaintiff rendered various legal services, being an allegation of the performance of extra work, did not limit his recovery to the actual service in contemplation at the time the contract was entered into—Mecartney v. As to agreement on price

Where the attorneys in their complaint did not rely specifically upon an original contract to pay one hundred dollars for professional services, but upon a general allegation that they performed services between two dates at the agreed price of one hundred dollars, it was unnecessary in order to sustain the complaint that the price should have been agreed upon beforehand for the services actually rendered or an action for services declared on his contract of employment, and recovered as upon a quantum meruit, is not a material variance, unless the client was thereby misled to his prejudice;[5] nor does any variance exist between a contract declared on and one offered in evidence not as the basis of recovery but merely to show performance of services.[6]

§ 204. —— Evidence

a. Presumptions and burden of proof
b. Admissibility
c. Weight and sufficiency

a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

(1) In general
(2) As to agreements during relationship

(1) In General

(a) As to plaintiff
(b) As to defendant

(a) As to Plaintiff

The burden is on plaintiff attorney to prove the substantial allegations of his complaint, declaration, or petition by a fair preponderance of evidence.

In an action by an attorney to recover compensation for professional services, the burden of proof is on him to make out his case, and establish the substantial allegations of his complaint, declaration, or petition by a fair preponderance of competent evidence.[7] A presumption of employment does not arise from the fact that plaintiff is a licensed attorney,[8] and the burden is on him of proving a contract with defendant to render the services for which he is suing,[9] or, in an action for the reasonable value of his services, to establish the absence of an express agreement as to the amount of compensation,[10] that the services were rendered at defendant's request or by his authority,[11] and that defendant is liable or has promised to pay therefor,[12] and where it is necessary for the attorney to allege nonpayment, the burden of proving the same is on him[13] He is that the entire one hundred dollars should be agreed upon at one time, and if the original contract was to pay one hundred dollars for certain specific services, and afterward that contract was modified, so that a part of the services were waived, and defendant still agreed to pay the one hundred dollars for services already performed, that would be sufficient to sustain allegations of the complaint—Wheelock v. Richardson, 178 P 377, 91 Or. 87.

Costs and expenditures

For services rendered to a third person

An attorney suing for his fee for services rendered defendant's brother has the burden of proving by a preponderance of evidence that he was employed by defendant and not by his brother.—Landry v. White, (La App) 146 So. 509, affirmed 148 So. 104.

If there is shown a lack of authority on the part of one of the contracting parties, there is no valid contract.—Cormac v Murphy, 208 P. 360, 58 Cal App 366.

Presumption of authority of collection agency

A presumption obtains that a client placing a claim in the hands of a collection agency knows that the agency will employ a local attorney to collect the claim—Stiles v. Cooter Gin Co, (Mo App) 74 S.W (2d) 1092.

Services to agent

In an action by an attorney to recover for services to an agent of corporate stockholders, plaintiff has the burden of proving defendant's authorization or promise to pay for such services—Burden v Robertson, (C C A.N.Y.) 7 F (2d) 266.

12. Closson v Seaboard Sand & Gravel Corp, 265 N.Y S. 160, 238 App Div 584, motion denied 189 N. E 701, 263 N.Y 568.

Implied promise

An attorney suing for services under a contract implied from conduct has the burden to prove a promise to pay, or circumstances implying a promise to pay, therefor.—Hirtsgaard v. Bowen, 237 N.W. 1, 183 Minn. 339

Understanding of payment

To support a recovery for services rendered by an attorney on quantum meruit, there must be evidence showing that the services were rendered with some understanding or expectation by both parties that compensation was to be made—In re Mumford's Estate, 160 P. 667, 173 Cal. 511.

13. Harlan v Lambert, 135 P. 1079, 19 Cal App 349.

not required to go further and disprove facts brought out by defendant.[14]

He, also, has the burden of proving the nature and extent of the services rendered by him,[15] the value of such services,[16] and the reasonableness of his charge.[17]

If the action is on an express contract, the burden of proof is on plaintiff to prove the contract described and relied on in his complaint;[18] and under a statute making a contract for a contingent fee void if the employment was induced by solicitation by, or on behalf of, the attorney, without such services having been first sought by the client, it is incumbent on plaintiff, in an action on a contract for such a fee, to show that it was made in good faith.[19]

If the attorney has undertaken to conduct litigation, he must show a termination of the litigation or an excuse for nonperformance of the contract.[20]

If such an undertaking is for a contingent fee, the presumption is that he has contracted to carry the case through until judgment is obtained and the amount thereof collected;[21] and if he has been discharged before he has rendered any services, the burden is on him to show his readiness to proceed with diligence.[22]

Where one is a member of a law firm, his legal services are presumed to be in the firm's behalf; and if he is acting in his individual capacity the burden is on him to show that fact.[23]

Admission to practice. Where that question is raised, the attorney has the burden of proving that he was duly admitted to practice law, as required by statute,[24] and he is not relieved from such burden on the theory that he is an officer of the court and that the court will take judicial notice of his status as such.[25]

Assisting attorney. Where plaintiff rendered legal services at the request of defendant's principal attorney, the burden is on him to prove that the attorney had authority to employ assistants at the expense of defendant;[26] but he is not required

For percentage of recovery

An attorney, suing on a contract providing for his compensation as half of the recovery, need not disprove a contention by defendant that one half of the recovery was to be paid only in case defendant's brother consented to the contract, and that suit be first brought—Ver Straten v. Rule of court

Where a fee bill adopted in a county fixes counsel fees for an estate not exceeding a certain amount, but allows a larger sum under exceptional circumstances, when an accountant claims the larger amount for his counsel, the burden is on him to prove the value of the services—Mitakus's Estate, 13 Pa Dist. & Co 387

Where an attorney has been discharged, without fault on his part, from further services in a suit just begun under a contract for payment contingent on successful prosecution of the suit, his measure of damages is not the contingent fee agreed on, but the value of the services rendered, and, in the absence of evidence of the reasonable value of such services, no recovery can be had—Clayton v. Defense that contract was on different terms

Where, in an attorney's suit on an express contract to pay twenty-five dollars for legal services, the defense is that an entirely different contract was made, that is, one to pay only in the event the litigation was successful, such defense is merely a denial of the contract contended for by plaintiff attorney, and the burden of proof is always on him to carry, apart from any presumption that he was to receive pay for his services, inapplicable in the presence of direct evidence on the issue—Shepard v. Pullum, (Mo. App) 218 S W 975.

to prove that defendant knew of the efforts he was making in the matter [27]

Extra compensation. If a contract on a salary basis for legal services is shown, the burden is on claimant to show that certain services rendered were not rendered under the salary arrangement before extra compensation can be obtained therefor.[28]

Fee allowed in another action. In an action to recover an attorney's fee allowed in another action, the presumption is that it was fair and reasonable,[29] and that there was a contract of employment.[30]

Renewal of contract. Where an attorney, employed by the year, is permitted to enter on a second year without an additional employment contract, the presumption is that he does so under a renewal of the original contract.[31]

(b) As to Defendant

Defendant client has the burden of introducing proof to establish matters of affirmative defense set up by him.

The burden is on defendant client of establishing any matter of affirmative defense set up by him;[32] and as an attorney is presumed to have discharged his duty, whether legal or moral, until the contrary is shown,[33] the burden is on defendant, where he relies on the misconduct or negligence of his attorney as a matter of defense, to prove such fact.[34] The burden is also on defendant to prove, as a matter of defense, the fact that the attorney's services were agreed to be rendered for a very small fee,[35] or were to be gratuitous,[36] as one employing an attorney at law is presumed to contemplate payment of a fee.[37] The burden is also on him of proving the defense that the contract of employment was procured by fraud or undue influence,[38] or was unreasonable [39]

The burden is on defendant to prove, as pleaded by him, that there had been a settlement;[40] and if a compromise and settlement is made with the same result as that authorized by the contract of employment, the presumption arises that it was made in pursuance of such contract and the burden of proving the contrary is on defendant.[41]

Joint liability. Although the attorney sues on a quantum meruit, if his allegations show that the employment was express and specific and the simultaneous act of the several defendants in furtherance of a common purpose and for a benefit common to all, the obligation must be presumed to be

Contract with one member of law firm

In an action by a firm for the balance due for services, a client, asserting a contract of employment with one member of a firm of attorneys only, has the burden of proving such fact.—Scott v. Moon, 130 S E 241, 143 Va. 425.

Divided liability

In an attorney's action against a client for his fee, the defense that defendant's liability was a divided liability to be shared by another was a special defense, under which defendant had the burden of proof.—Danziger v. Kaplan, 129 So. 673, 171 La. 73.

Modification of contract

The burden of proving a modification of the alleged contract for services of an attorney by an agreement that certain services were not to be paid for is on defendant in an action for compensation under an alleged contract.—Leonard v. Schall, 157 N W. 723, 132 Minn. 446.

Special contract

Presumption

Contract for retainer

Where, in an attorney's action for his retainer, the client concedes execution of the contract, but claims that the attorney had misrepresented that the instruments the client had signed were mere letters to another attorney, the burden of proving such fraud is on the client.—Hayden v. Purcell, 182 N Y S 293.

joint, notwithstanding the interests of the beneficiaries of the contract are disproportionate.[42] The fact, however, that an attorney's services are as beneficial to a third party as to the client will not raise a presumption that the third party is liable therefor, unless the services are accepted by him and it is understood that he is to be liable also.[43]

Payment. Where payment is pleaded by defendant, as an affirmative defense, the burden is on him of introducing proof thereof.[44]

Rebuttal of presumption. The presumption arising, in the absence of an express contract, from the acceptance of an attorney's services, that there is an obligation to pay what the services are reasonably worth, may be rebutted by proof of facts and circumstances showing that the parties otherwise intended.[45]

(2) As to Agreements during Relationship

With respect to compensation agreements made during the existence of the relationship of attorney and client, presumptions and burden of proof as to the fairness and validity of a particular agreement depend on the circumstances of the case.

Where after the relationship has been established, an attorney and client enter into an agreement in reference to the attorney's compensation, such as for additional compensation without additional services being contemplated, a presumption of fraud or undue influence on the part of the attorney arises, and the burden is on him to prove that the agreement was fairly and openly made, was supported by an adequate consideration, and that he gave the client full knowledge of the facts and of his legal rights, when he entered into the agreement,[46] and that the services to be performed were reasonably worth the amount stated in the agreement,[47] and where in such a case the attorney sues in equity on the contract, he must show that his claim, independent of the express terms of the contract, is so fair and equitable that a court of equity will not hesitate to enforce it.[48] This rule has been held to apply even though the contract was authorized by statute.[49]

Mere negative conduct of the attorney in failing to ask the client to pay an excessive fee tendered to him is not sufficient to overcome the presumption of fraud in such a case,[50] the attorney must go further and show that he gave the client the information which, under similar circumstances, a disinterested legal adviser would have given.[51]

Generally speaking, however, the general rule does not apply with the same stringency to contracts by which the relation is inaugurated,[52] and the burden is not on the attorney of proving good faith where the confidential relationship of attorney and client did not exist between the parties before the contract was entered into,[53] nor where the parties otherwise deal at arm's length;[54] nor where it is apparent that there could have been no possible design on the part of the attorney to overreach his client in entering into the contract,[55] nor where the transaction between attorney and client was merely the giving of a note in payment of services performed.[56] It has been held that a contract for compensation, between an attorney and client, which is is not unreasonable on its face, is presumed to be fair.[57]

b. Admissibility

(3) As to nature and extent of services
(4) As to value of services or amount of compensation
(5) As to performance

(1) In General

Competent evidence, relevant and material to the issues raised, is admissible in an action by an attorney for his compensation.

As in other civil actions, such evidence only is admissible in an action by an attorney for his fees or compensation, as is relevant, material, and competent to prove or disprove the issues in the case.[58] Evidence is not admissible as to a matter or transaction which is not shown to have been connected with the attorney's services,[59] such as to the time a third party spent on the litigation,[60] as to defendant being satisfied with a decree in a certain other case conducted by plaintiff for him,[61] or as to defendant having secured other counsel because of plaintiff's hostile attitude, where there is no evidence by defendant showing that he was embarrassed by any act of plaintiff, or that he lost

As to fairness of fee

Where defendant, in his answer and testimony, denies he ever employed plaintiff as attorney, and the evidence shows that in employing plaintiff the parties dealt at arm's length, an instruction requiring plaintiff to prove that the contract for the attorney's fees sued on was fair and equitable, if it was executed after the relationship of attorney and client existed, and that the amount agreed to be paid was reasonable, imposes a greater duty on plaintiff than the law requires—Blodgett v Koenig, 284 S.W. 505, 314 Mo 262.

Letter from defendant's attorney, written nearly two years after the beginning of the alleged services, and one year after the ending thereof, and which in no way refers to the services claimed to have been rendered by plaintiff, but contains merely a reference to lawyer's fees in general, is inadmissible on the grounds that it is after the fact, incompetent, immaterial, and not binding on defendant—Baright v. Walska, 209 N Y S. 157, 212 App Div. 500

Papers pertaining to a settlement, which the client himself made after refusing to accept a settlement recommended by the attorney, may properly be rejected in an action by the attorney on a contract for his services—Coughlon v. Pedelty, 233 N W. 68, 211 Iowa 138.

any rights to a fair trial.[62]

On the question of the attorney's good faith in making a contract increasing his compensation after the establishment of the relation of attorney and client, evidence is admissible of his expression of an opinion regarding the probability of a reversal of the judgment secured by him,[63] and where the question is as to the good faith of assisting counsel, letters from him to defendant's leading attorney which tend to refute allegations of his bad faith are admissible.[64]

(2) As to Employment

Competent evidence which tends to show the fact and terms of the contract of employment is admissible for such purpose.

Each of the parties, in support of his claim, is entitled to prove the facts and circumstances surrounding the employment;[65] and subject to the usual limitations of relevancy, materiality, and competency, any evidence is admissible which tends to show the contract of employment.[66] Such evidence may consist of correspondence and telegrams respecting the matter, and showing the terms and conditions of the employment,[67] of bills presented by the attorney and canceled checks in payment thereof;[68] of consultations just before the bringing of the suit for defendant,[69] and of the fact of a previous employment.[70] The records and pleadings in the action in which the services were rendered are usually admissible as tending to show an employment.[71] A draft of a contract of employment, which the client had refused to sign, is not admissible as evidence of the fact of employment.[72]

Testimony of the attorney himself is admissible for the purpose of showing his employment,[73] and where a witness has testified as to his authority to employ plaintiff as attorney for defendant, for the purpose of showing the terms of the employment, plaintiff may testify as to what such witness said to him at the time of the employment.[74]

Coercion. Testimony of defendant that he was coerced into signing the contract of employment by defendant's attorney other than plaintiff is not admissible, in the absence of proof, or offer of proof, tending to show that plaintiff attorney had knowledge of such coercion.[75]

the client, provided there is evidence of his authority to employ an attorney;[76] but not where there is no evidence of such authority.[77] Self-serving statements made by the client, in the absence of the attorney, as to his giving the attorney business without any intention of paying therefor, are inadmissible under the hearsay rule.[78]

Nonemployment or discharge. Any legitimate evidence tending to disprove the employment of plaintiff[79] or to establish his discharge[80] is admissible on behalf of defendant. The best evidence, however, procurable under the circumstances must be produced;[81] and whether the attorney was discharged for a justifiable cause should be determined on the testimony with an opportunity for cross-examination, and not on the affidavits alone.[82] Where defendant conclusively admits signing the contract and knowing what he was doing, testimony that he was sick at the time is inadmissible.[83]

(3) As to Nature and Extent of Services

Competent evidence is admissible which tends to show the nature and extent of the services rendered by the attorney, for which he demands compensation.

In an action by an attorney for compensation, it is proper to show the nature and extent of the employment or services in connection with which the charge is made;[84] and where there is a dispute as to the terms of the contract, evidence as to the nature and value of the attorney's services and negotiations prior to the contract should be admitted.[85]

Evidence of services rendered in another matter,[86] prior to the making of the contract sued on,[87] is generally inadmissible However, it has been held that a judgment roll in a former case, in which plaintiff had represented defendant, is admissible to show that plaintiff had gone over the same ground and did not have to labor so hard as he represents in the litigation for which he demands compensation.[88] In an action on a

As affecting defendant's credibility

Plaintiff may prove his services in defending criminal prosecutions, in which the indictments were defective and new indictments returned, despite the claim that this proof magnified the offenses, so as to affect defendant's credibility as a witness, especially as there were only two cases—Schmalz v. Arnwine, 246 P. 718, 118 Or 300.

Attorney's conversations as to the transaction involved, with an emissary of defendant, is admissible to show the nature of his services and as tending to show that his efforts brought about the desired result—Stockbridge v Mixer, 116 N E. 877, 227 Mass. 501

Checks signed by the attorney, in payment of court costs and expenses incurred in the client's behalf, are competent to show the nature and extent of the attorney's employment—Asher v. Golden, 50 S W.(2d) 3, 244 Ky 56.

Collection of dividends

In an attorney's action for compensation for services rendered claimant in a bankruptcy proceeding, evidence that he had collected dividends on the claim, and as to its amount, is admissible—Paxson v Gast, 215 S W 515, 202 Mo App 610

Disagreement between defendant and third party

Testimony concerning a disagreement between defendant and a third party over a contract in reference to a land deal is proper as disclosing the services of the attorney in connection therewith—Bolles v. O'Brien, 151 P. 450, 59 Colo. 261.

Magnitude of the enterprise, in which the attorney's services are retained, and the results attained are proper factors in determining the measure of compensation to be allowed the attorney, and evidence tending to show these facts is admissible—Bolles v. O'Brien, 151 P 450, 59 Colo. 261.

Procuring order of reviver

In an action under an oral contract making the amount of attorney's fees contingent on success, evidence of an order of reviver made by plaintiff on the death of a party not represented by him is competent on the issue as to the character of his services—Cornelius v. Smith, 175 P. 754, 73 Okl. 217, 9 A L R. 233.

Testimony as to difficulty of services

In an action by an attorney for services in securing an increase in a condemnation award, a former city attorney's testimony to the effect that it was easy to get a reduction, but difficult to get an increase, in the price of condemned property is immaterial—Graeser v. Jones, 251 N W. 162, 217 Iowa 499.

Value of client's holdings

In an attorney's action for services rendered in connection with a land deal, plaintiff may show the market value of his client's holdings, which were purchased and partially disposed of during plaintiff's employment, when he acted as counsel in all matters pertaining to the purchase, title, and manipulation of the disposition of the land, etc, as tending to show the magnitude of the enterprises which plaintiff was employed to look after, this having a bearing on the question of his compensation—Bolles v. O'Brien, 151 P. 450, 59 Colo. 261.

quantum meruit for compensation for conducting certain litigation, the proceedings and record on an appeal subsequent to the termination of plaintiff's contract are admissible for the purpose of showing the soundness of plaintiff's theories in the conduct of the litigation for which he was hired and the opposition of his client.[89] In an action to recover an attorney's fees from a former client, the court files of the criminal cases having interlocking features with the civil cases in which plaintiff was representing the client, and which served to help explain the nature and extent of plaintiff's services, were admitted.[90]

(4) As to Value of Services or Amount of Compensation

Competent evidence of pertinent facts and circumstances which tend to show the value of the attorney's services is admissible for such purpose, such as the contract between the parties, if any, the amount usually charged for such services, and the financial ability of the client.

In the absence of a contract for a specified fee, the proper method of establishing the amount of an attorney's fees is by showing a reasonable compensation;[91] and except where the question of value is not in issue (supra § 203), or where the court is competent to exercise its own judgment in fixing the value (supra § 191), any competent relevant or material evidence is admissible which tends to prove pertinent facts and circumstances which, as above stated (supra § 191), may be considered in determining the value of the services rendered by the attorney,[92] such as the nature and importance of the litigation and the amount of money or the value of the property involved,[93] and such evidence is not necessarily confined to the date of the rendition of the services, but the value at the time of the trial may also be shown.[94] Similarly, evidence is admissible as to the labor and length of time plaintiff spent on the case,[95] the care and diligence exhibited,[96] the expenses incurred by him,[97] the experience, skill, ability, character, and standing of the attorney,[98] and that defendant knew of these qualities,[99] and evidence also is admissible as to the kind of services rendered in a business capacity, incidental to legal services,[1] and the beneficial results secured by de-

Value of defendant's property
In an attorneys' action for services in defending, for defendant's wife, his cross-action for divorce, the value of his property at the time the divorce action was pending and tried is admissible to aid in ascertaining the importance of the interests involved in the litigation in which the services were rendered.—Reynolds & Heitsman v. Ignorance of standing of attorney
It is not competent for defendant, in order to sustain his version of the contract, to prove that plaintiff was a lawyer of limited practice and experience, when there is nothing to indicate that, at the time the contract was entered into, defendant knew anything about plaintiff's qualifications, but rather that he did not.—Shakespeare v. Baughman, 71 N.W. 374, 113 Mich. 551.

1. Bolles v. O'Brien, 151 P. 450, 59 Colo. 261.

In land deal
In an attorney's action for services in connection with a land deal, plaintiff may show the kind of services rendered, as claimed by defendant client, in a business capacity, fendant through plaintiff's services.[2]

Evidence is not admissible, however, as to the prospective benefits which may accrue in the future;[3] nor is it competent to show the profits made by defendant, through plaintiff's services, in another similar transaction;[4] nor is it competent for defendant to show that he could have compromised the suit, in respect of which plaintiff's services were rendered, for a nominal sum after the retainer.[5]

The record and pleadings in the action wherein the alleged services were rendered are admissible to show their nature and value,[6] and whether plaintiff was the sole attorney in the cause or not,[7] but evidence as to the truth or falsity of charges in the pleadings in such action is immaterial;[8] and it is improper for plaintiff to read in evidence the opinion of the court, giving the reasons for its decisions.[9]

A bill or account rendered by the attorney,[10] and an offer of pay by the client,[11] are admissible as evidence of their own estimates of what such services are worth.

Evidence as to the time the amount in controversy, or a part thereof, fell due is admissible as affecting the interest to be assessed in the event of recovery.[12]

Attorney as witness. The attorney himself is a competent witness to prove the value of his services.[13]

Contract as to compensation. In an action on a quantum meruit, as in the case of a discharge, although a contract as to compensation is not in itself a criterion of the value of the services rendered, it is admissible on that issue as evidence of what the parties themselves considered a reasonable charge for the services contemplated,[14] unless the contract is invalid;[15] and where, although discharged, the attorney's services were such that he was entitled to receive the entire amount stipulated in the contract, it may be resorted to as a basis for calculating the compensation.[16] In an action against a banking commissioner for attorney's fees which the commissioner is authorized to fix, his agreement as to legal fees may be shown, and if reasonable and approved by the court, as required by statute, is binding.[17] and not as an ordinary attorney, since business services rendered by an attorney in connection with professional employment should not be separated, but should be considered and allowed for in fixing his compensation.—Bolles v. O'Brien, 151 P. 450, 59 Colo 261.

Services in suit to restrain unfair competition

In a suit for compensation as attorneys in defendant company's suit to restrain unfair trade competition by another firm, plaintiffs' evidence of the amount of business done by defendant company in the United States generally is properly admitted not to show defendant's ability to pay, but as bearing on the results obtained by the litigation.—Coco-Cola Co. v. O'Brien, 151 P. 450, 59 Colo. 261.

Customary charges; fees of others. In determining the value of an attorney's services it is proper to receive evidence as to the price usually charged and received for similar services by other persons of the same profession, in the same vicinity, and practicing in the same court.[18] It has been held, however, that a local usage as to fees is not competent to show the value of services rendered in another state or county,[19] and that, in any case, such evidence is not essential, inasmuch as the court itself is competent to judge with respect to the value of such services.[20]

Evidence of what another attorney received in the same case or in other particular cases, generally, is not admissible in determining the value of the services performed.[21] It has been held, however, that the amount paid to an associate counsel, which is not questioned and the fairness of which is unchallenged, is proper evidence to be considered as to the reasonableness of a contingent fee agreed on, and the value of the services of the attorney who claims the contingent fee.[22]

Testimony that another person, such as a notary, would have performed a certain service for a specified amount, is not admissible to show that the same service is not more valuable when rendered by the attorney;[23] and evidence as to the reasonable value of a broker's commission for procuring bank discounts is not admissible in an action for an attorney's services in procuring such discounts, where the latter's services were not altogether the same.[24]

Value of services or fees in other actions. On the question of the value of an attorney's services in a particular action, evidence is not admissible as to the value of services rendered by him in another action,[25] or as to amounts received from other clients, especially where the circumstances are dissimilar.[26] It has been held that evidence of what plaintiff had charged for services rendered to defendant prior to those in question is not admissible, as such evidence is irrelevant as tending to raise an outside issue;[27] but, on the other hand, it has been held that evidence of other similar proceedings in which plaintiff represented defendant, and his compensation therefor, is admissible as bearing on the question of the value of the services for which the action is brought.[28]

Financial ability of client. Since the financial ability or wealth of the client is an element to be considered in determining the reasonable value of the attorney's services to him (supra § 191), evidence is admissible on such question which tends to show the financial ability or value of the estate of defendant.[29] Such evidence is admissible, however, only to show the nature of the litigation in which the client has been involved and his financial ability to have responded to any judgment which might have been rendered against him, and is not admissible to draw a distinction between a rich and a poor man or to prejudice the client's rights,[30] and it has been held inadmissible in an action by the client against the attorney on a note, wherein the attorney sets up that the note is merely evidence of an advance on a fee due him and prays judgment on a counterclaim for fees in excess of the amount of the note.[31]

(5) As to Performance

On the question of performance competent evidence is admissible which tends to show whether the plaintiff had or had not performed services in accordance with the terms of his contract of employment.

In an attorney's action for compensation, evidence is admissible on behalf of plaintiff which tends to show performance by him of the services for which he was employed,[32] and, on behalf of defendant, which tends to show a failure on the part of plaintiff properly to perform the contract[33] Where defendant claims a set-off of payments made, plaintiff may show that such payments, in accordance with the agreement with defendant, had been used to pay clerical help hired for defendant.[34]

c. Weight and Sufficiency

The rules governing the weight and sufficiency of evidence in civil actions generally apply in determining the weight and sufficiency of the evidence in an action by an attorney for compensation; and these rules apply not only to the sufficiency of evidence to support the verdict or judgment generally, but also to the weight and sufficiency of the evidence to prove particular facts, such as the nature and terms of the attorney's contract of employment, the value of his services, and the amount of his compensation.

The weight and sufficiency of the evidence in an action by an attorney for the recovery of compensation is governed by the rules applicable to the weight and sufficiency of evidence in civil actions in general. In accordance with these rules, the evidence on plaintiff's behalf must be of such weight and sufficiency as to discharge his burden of proof and establish the facts and issues alleged and relied on by him to constitute his cause of action;[35] and, on behalf of defendant, in order to entitle him to defeat a recovery or otherwise succeed in his matter of defense, the evidence must be of such weight and sufficiency as to establish matters of defense set up by him.[36] Evidence of the retaining of plaintiff, of the services rendered by him and the value thereof, or an agreed fee, makes out a prima facie case for plaintiff,[37] and he may recover a reasonable sum in the absence of evidence preponderating in favor of the client's special defense that the attorney had agreed to render the services for a specified amount.[38]

Support of verdict or judgment. The general rule that a preponderance of the evidence is necessary and sufficient is applicable in determining the sufficiency of the evidence to support a verdict or judgment for plaintiff in an action by an attorney for a fee or compensation for services rendered[39] or to support a verdict or judgment for

Rejection of settlement

Evidence that an offer of settlement for the death of plaintiff's husband was discussed by plaintiff's attorney with her son, who was a lawyer, and who urged an acceptance of the offer, and that, at an interview with another attorney, plaintiff's attorney opposed the settlement while the son favored it, and that the offer was subsequently rejected, sustains a finding that the attorney acted on his own judgment in declining the offer—Platt v Shields, 119 A. 520, 96 Vt. 257.

services;[43] the happening of contingencies on which fee depended;[44] the agreement of defendant to pay plaintiff's attorney's fees, on settlement of the controversy,[45] the payment for legal services;[46] and the mode of payment[47]

Division of fees. The weight and sufficiency of the evidence to establish an agreement between associate counsel for a division of fees, the nature and extent of such agreement, and the attorneys' rights thereunder,[48] is controlled by the general

ed with their client, that defendant had actual notice of plaintiffs' one-third interest in their client's cause of action—Wichita Falls Electric Co v. Chancellor & Bryan, (Tex Civ App) 229 S W 649, error refused

In action by assistant attorney

Where, in an action by one attorney against another to recover for services performed at the latter's request for defendant's client, defendant testifies that there was no legal basis for the litigation or claims of his client, and that the compromise in question was dictated by sentimental reasons, but where the terms of the compromise required the client to release all claims and dismiss all pending claims against the estate, and both were done, and defendant attorney received his compensation out of the sum paid in compromise, it might well be found that there was a happening of all the contingencies on which plaintiff's claim to a fee depended—Mecartney v. Wallace, 214 Ill App 618

Mortgage and note for fees

In a suit to foreclose a mortgage securing a note given for an attorney's fees, the evidence was sufficient to support a finding that the amount of the note was an unreasonable charge, and that the note and the mortgage securing it were not executed and delivered voluntarily, and, also, to support a finding that payments of interest on the note were made while the relation of attorney and client existed between the parties, and were not made voluntarily—Magee v Brenneman, 206 P. 37, 188 Cal. 562.

Payment, and accord and satisfaction

Evidence of an agreement by the president, attorney, and other officers and directors of a corporation that the corporation would credit the president with a stated sum on his indebtedness to it and charge such amount against its indebtedness to the attorney for legal services in full accord and satisfaction of the moneys advanced to the latter by the president on a note sued on was insufficient to establish defenses of payment and accord and satisfaction in the absence of evidence that the parties to such arrangement could bind the corporation to carry out the agreement between the president and the attorney or that the purported arrangement was consummated—Ballard v. Trainor, 2 N E (2d) 875, 285 Ill App 509.

48. Evidence held sufficient

(2) To support a finding that plaintiff, in an action to recover his share of a fee collected by other attorneys associated in the case, was employed and was entitled to a specified fee on a quantum meruit—Stuckey v. Norwood, 182 S W. 528, 122 Ark. 131.

Evidence held insufficient

(1) To discharge plaintiff's burden of proof, in a suit by an attorney against a member of a firm in which he was associated in litigation to recover his share of a fee earned, that defendant was indebted to him.—Denson v Middleton, 84 So 473, 17 Ala.App. 266, certiorari denied Ex parte Middleton, 85 So. 923, 204 Ala. 699

(2) To preponderate against a finding that after the dissolution of a law firm the fees were divisible among the partners in the former rules governing the weight and sufficiency of evidence in other civil cases.

Fact of employment. The general rules of evidence apply as to the weight and sufficiency of the evidence to prove the fact, nature, and terms of a contract of employment, establishing the relation of attorney and client, between plaintiff and defendant,[49] including the employment of assistant attorneys;[50] the employment by, or liability of, a particular person for the services,[51] or as to an agreement between an attorney and client as to compensation, after the relation has been established, being fair and free from fraud and undue influence,[52] or, where the relationship did not

By member of syndicate
Evidence that an attorney, at the request of one member of a syndicate, had rendered services in the formation of the syndicate and the purchase of property for it, is sufficient to sustain a verdict authorizing recovery for such services against the member requesting them, although the attorney testified the services were rendered for the syndicate, while defendant's testimony showed that the member requesting the services had no authority from the other members of the syndicate to do so—Sands v McNeill, 52 App.D.C. 85, 281 F. 589

Employment to collect deceased husband's insurance
In an action by an attorney for services rendered to a widow in collecting her deceased husband's insurance, evidence was held to establish that the widow did not employ the attorney, did not knowingly permit him to act, and did not knowingly accept the benefit of any services he might have rendered—Smith v. Kneisley, (Wash.) 60 P.(2d) 14.

50. Evidence held sufficient

Attorney for incompetent
The mere fact that an incompetent person, of whom the trial court found attorney had taken advantage in procuring a contract for excessive compensation, testified that the attorney had not previously acted for her does not prevent a finding on the evidence to the contrary that the relation of attorney and client existed at the time the contract was previously exist, as to sustaining defendant's burden of proving that the contract was obtained by fraud or undue influence;[53] or as to the discharge or other termination of the employment of the attorney.[54]

In determining an attorney's employment the court may draw reasonable inferences from the conduct of the parties.[55] A written request to an attorney for his opinion has been held sufficient evidence to show employment.[56]

Value of services and amount of compensation. The general rules of evidence control in determining the weight and sufficiency of the evidence as to the amount and nature of the compensation or fee agreed on,[57] or as to the fact that the services were to be gratuitous,[58] or, in case of the absence of an agreement as to the amount of the fee, as to the reasonable value of the services rendered by the attorney.[59] A statement sent to the client for a certain sum on account of past and future procured—Brydonjack v. Rieck, 42 P.(2d) 336, 5 Cal.App.(2d) 219

Evidence held of little probative value

Where an attorney concluded a contingent fee contract with his client, which recited the refusal of an attempted compromise by his client, and called for the immediate payment of his fee on any compromise contract acknowledging as his due the sum of fifty thousand dollars, a statement estimating the value of the property, an order on trustees to pay the amount of the fee to the attorney, and a promissory note for the amount of the fee were of little probative value for the purpose of establishing that the client understood the contingent fee contract—Ridge v. Healy, (Mo.) 251 F. 798, 164 C.C.A. 32.

Inference not warranted

The fact that trustees, who delivered a trust deed and check for the amount of a loan secured to a title company with instructions to deliver the check when the mortgagor showed good title, were personally interested in the consummation of the loan to the extent of a large bonus does not warrant the inference that the trustees were employing the title company to examine the title, so as to entitle the attorney, employed by it on the mortgagor's behalf to bring suit for specific performance, to allowance of his fee from the proceeds of a foreclosure sale—Drury v. Brightwood Sanitarium Co., 133 A. 314, 150 Md. 585.

services does not limit the amount of the compensation;[60] and an attorney's bill taxed ex parte is not conclusive proof of the services or disbursements charged.[61]

Abstract statements of witnesses as to the reputed worth of the client or what constitutes a reasonable fee are not sufficient to support a verdict on a quantum meruit, their opinions must be supported by tangible evidence of something expended, done, or accomplished in behalf of the client.[62]

As to value of services exceeding sum paid. In a suit by an attorney for the value of services and for a certain sum contracted to be paid by defendant for such services, plaintiff is not entitled to recover, where the evidence does not show that the value of the services exceeded money already paid to the attorney on account of the services rendered, and it appears that the sum paid exceeded the percentage of a settlement due the attorney under the contract.[63]

(4) To sustain a finding that the value of a discharged attorney's services in condemnation proceedings was the same as the amount stipulated in the contract for the entire proceedings—In re Driscoll, 228 N.Y.S. 335, 131 Misc. 613.

Agreed fee as evidence of value

Where a husband, under a contract to pay attorneys a certain fee for securing a divorce by default and a contingent fee dependent on success in case of contest, dismissed the action without the attorneys' consent, the agreed fee for default is some evidence of the reasonable value of the services of the attorneys down to their discharge, sustaining a judgment for that sum, less payments against the husband—Ayres v. Lipschutz, 228 P. 720, 68 Cal App 134.

Case settled on rules of opponent

A claim that services rendered by an attorney for several counties, in actions against public utility companies, were of greater value than those performed by others interested in formulating rules for settlement of the action, in determining the amount due by the public utility companies to the counties, is not sustained by evidence showing that the case was settled on rules formulated by technical and legal representatives of the public utility companies, and not by rules suggested by the attorney—Tulare County v. City of Dinuba, 270 P. 201, 205 Cal. 111.

Excluding services of other attorney

A judgment for the reasonable value of an attorney's services, based on testimony in response to a hypothetical question which excludes services rendered by other attorneys, who conducted a second trial of the case and won a verdict, is erroneous, since the reasonable compensation could be determined only by considering the services of the other attorneys—Gruskay v. Simenauskas, 140 A. 724, 107 Conn. 380.

Evidence of three attorneys as to the value of legal services may be considered correct as against the testimony of another attorney.—Levy v. Dehan, 8 La App. 754.

Filing lien

Where there was a controversy as to the agreement concerning compensation, the attorney's filing of a lien for the amount allowed as attorney's fees shows that he was not entitled to any more—Gust v. Judd, 153 P. 309, 88 Wash. 536.

Prima facie case

Evidence indicating the balance due an attorney for payment of the usual fees makes a prima facie case as to reasonableness of the charge—Butcher v. Janssen, 242 N.Y.S. 643, 137 Misc. 42.

Remarks of court as to unnecessarily large record

That the record in a case, wherein an attorney suing for compensation represented defendant, was unnecessarily large, as stated in the supreme court's opinion, does not show that the verdict for plaintiff was too large, the supreme court's remark being directed to the opposing counsel, and the matters which defendant contended should have been omitted being the ones that won the case for him—Axton v. Vance, 269 S.W. 534, 207 Ky. 580.

Resolution not conclusive

A resolution of a board of commissioners of an improvement district fixing the fee of an attorney employed by them is proper for consideration in determining the amount of the fee, but is not conclusive—Tennison v. Quinn, 282 S W. 20, 170 Ark 1194.

62. Baruch v. Giblin, (Fla.) 164 So 831.
63. Terrell v Brandt, 142 S E. 460, 37 Ga.App. 760.

After the issues between an attorney and his client have been properly framed, the selection of a tribunal depends largely on the nature of the case and the wishes of the parties concerned, and the determination of the issues may be left to a jury[64] or to the court,[65] or the matter may be referred to an auditor or referee to decide,[66] and such court or tribunal may exercise its own judgment in fixing the amount of the attorney's fees or compensation (supra § 191). The parties, however, may not be required to submit to the determination of committees, or other bodies extrajudicial in character, the amount that shall be allowed as attorney's fees.[67] Whether an attorney's cause of action against his client for compensation may be engrafted on the client's cause of action against another is a question of jurisdiction which may be passed on by a succeeding judge, notwithstanding a prior judge passed thereon.[68]

b. Questions of Law and Fact

(1) In general

(2) Value of services and amount of compensation

(1) In General

Disputed questions of fact relative to an attorney's compensation, on which the evidence is conflicting or of a doubtful nature, are to be determined by the jury; but a question of law or a question of fact, on which the evidence is clear and undisputed, is for the court alone to determine.

Where the evidence on material issues of fact in respect of an attorney's claim to compensation is of sufficient weight and sufficiency to be submitted to the jury,[69] and is conflicting, or, if undisputed, is such that reasonable minds might reach different conclusions therefrom, it is the province of the jury to decide such issues, and they should be submitted to the jury.[70] In accordance with this rule, where the evidence is conflicting or of a doubtful nature, it is usually a question of fact for the jury to decide as to the existence of the relation of attorney and client, and whether the contract of employment was made by, or with the authority

(2) Whether the services were rendered for defendants or for a corporation in which defendants were interested.—Lewin v. Moody, 228 N.Y.S. 281, 131 Misc. 833.

(3) Whether under similar circumstances an attorney of reasonable professional capacity would have done as plaintiff did.—Slade v. Harris, 135 A. 570, 105 Conn. 436.

An action for recovery of money

A suit for an attorney's fee of a specified amount is an action for the recovery of money, within the meaning of a statutory provision that issues of fact arising in such an action shall be tried by a jury, unless a jury trial is waived or a reference is ordered.—Wolfe v. Campbell, 230 P. 506, 107 Okl. 112.

In an action by a client against his attorney to recover an alleged excessive fee retained by the attorney, where plaintiff testifies to a specific contract, and defendant denies its existence and claims compensation on a quantum meruit, the case may properly be submitted to the jury.—Gietzen v. Campbell, 220 N.W. 338, 247 Mich. 560.

of, defendant,[71] and, if so, whether the latter agreed to pay,[72] or is liable, for the services rendered;[73] whether, in an action on a quantum meruit, there was an express contract;[74] and as to whether the relationship of attorney and client existed at the time the contract of employment was entered into,[75] and, if so, whether the contract was fair, and free from fraud or undue influence.[76]

It is, also, usually a question of fact for the jury, under the evidence, as to what were the terms of the contract;[77] whether the specific services claimed were covered by the contract and rendered;[78] whether, at the time in question, the attorney was acting individually or as a member of a firm;[79] whether he had committed a material breach of the contract of employment,[80] and as to the fact of payment of the fee or compensation.[81]

Fraud in obtaining expenses

Where there is no evidence that the attorney acted otherwise than in good faith and in the exercise of her best judgment as to the interests of her clients in representing that it was necessary for her to attend a trial in a distant state, and, although she visited relatives en route, she did so at her own expense, the question of fraud in obtaining expenses of such trip from the clients should not have been submitted to jury.—Leibold v. Disobeying instructions

In a suit to recover attorney's fees under an express contract, the question whether plaintiffs disobeyed instructions of defendant client is properly submitted to the jury, where there is ample evidence to sustain a finding that plaintiffs did not.—Maynard v. Reynolds, (Mo.) 251 F. 734, 164 C.C.A. 18, certiorari denied 39 S.Ct. 19, 248 U.S. 578, 63 L.Ed. 429

In an action to recover fees from the adverse party who made a settlement with the client, where the evidence tends to show that the attorney failed or refused to pay the material witnesses their attendance fees or mileage while attending the client's case in a federal court, and for such reason the witnesses would not voluntarily attend the trial in the state court, the question whether the attorney had abandoned the client's case or had committed a material breach of contract of employment is for the jury.—Beaumont v. J. H. Hamlen & Son, 31 S.W.(2d) 24, 190 Ark. 630.

Termination of employment. Where the facts are disputed and the evidence is conflicting or of a doubtful character, it is a question for the jury as to whether the attorney was justified in abandoning his employment or withdrawing from the case,[82] whether there was a mutual rescission of the contract,[83] or whether the attorney had been discharged.[84]

Questions of law. Where the evidence on the issues of fact is legally insufficient, or is undisputed and clear and free from doubt, such issues should not be submitted to the jury, but should be determined by the court alone,[85] and this rule applies as to the legal effect of the contract of employment[86] and the question of negligence or want of skill.[87]

A promise or offer to pay the attorney extra compensation for services which he is already bound to perform constitutes no actionable obligation on the part of the client, and it is error to submit it to the jury as an item of the attorney's claim.[88]

(2) Value of Services and Amount of Compensation

Questions relative to the value of services rendered by the attorney and the amount of compensation due him are usually questions of fact for the jury, where the evidence thereon is conflicting or doubtful.

Where the facts are disputed and the evidence is conflicting or of a doubtful character, it is a question for the jury as to whether the amount of the attorney's fee has been fixed by agreement or whether he is entitled to a reasonable fee;[89] as to what the nature and amount of his fee is;[90] whether the fee charged or agreed on is reasonable;[91] and as to the amount of the fee, if any, which plaintiff should recover;[92] and where the contract leaves the amount of the compensation to be fixed by defendant, there is an implied agreement that in case of a difference of opinion in regard to the proper amount it should be submitted to a jury.[93] The reasonable value of the services rendered by the attorney, when in issue, is usually a question of fact for the jury to determine where the facts are disputed,[94] and it has been held that,

As shown by conduct

Whether, in a suit by a corporation's general counsel for fees for administering the estate of a stockholder, plaintiff's whole conduct in conducting the corporation's affairs showed an abandonment and rescission by both parties of his employment contract which required the rendition of services to stockholders, leaving counsel free to contract for the administration of a stockholder's estate for extra compensations, is a question for the jury—Treadwell v. Compensation of associate attorney

Where defendant, an attorney, engaged another attorney to render legal services under an agreement that he should fix the value of such services, the fact that the attorney employed, in a letter to defendant, stated that he did not question defendant's good faith in fixing the value of the services is not conclusive in an action for their reasonable value, so as to restrict the recovery to the amount fixed, and the matter should be submitted to the jury—Nave v. even where the rendition of the services is undisputed and plaintiff's testimony on the question of value is to be regarded as true, the value of the services is a question of fact for the jury.[95]

The reasonable value of legal services, however, has been held to be a question for the court to determine, where it has full information of what the services consisted,[96] as where the services have been performed in its presence.[97] In a suit to foreclose a mortgage securing a note given for an attorney's fee, where plaintiff failed to rebut the presumption arising from the execution of the note and mortgage, while the relation of attorney and client existed between the parties, that the note was executed under undue influence, the contract evidenced by the note was voidable at the instance of defendants, and the court had power to find what was a reasonable fee.[98]

The construction of stipulations and orders in another action concerning amount due the attorney is a question for the court.[99]

Effect of claiming lien. Where issue is joined as to what is a reasonable fee, such issue is for the jury, notwithstanding plaintiff may pray that an equitable lien be decreed against defendant's property.[1]

c. Demurrer to Evidence, Dismissal, or Direction of Verdict

As in the trial of other civil cases, where it is justified by the evidence, the court may grant a demurrer to the evidence or a dismissal or nonsuit, or it may direct a verdict for one of the parties.

Where the facts established by the evidence, in an attorney's action for compensation, are those alleged in the petition and prove a cause of action against defendant, a demurrer to the evidence will be overruled.[2] On the other hand, where the attorney intervenes in an action, in which evidence regarding fraud on his part in fixing his fee does not substantiate the claim of such fraud, his demurrer to the evidence will be sustained.[3]

Dismissal or nonsuit. In some states a dismissal or nonsuit may be granted for lack of evidence to sustain the attorney's complaint;[4] but where the defense applies only to a part of plaintiff's claim, the court cannot nonsuit or direct a verdict for defendant as to the entire claim.[5]

Direction of verdict. Where questions of fact are presented by the evidence which requires the case to be submitted to the jury, it is proper to deny, and error to direct, a verdict for plaintiff[6]

More experienced witnesses
The fact that the testimony of defendant's witnesses, as to the value of the attorney's services sued for, came from more experienced witnesses made a conflict in the testimony for the jury—Klass v Iowa Mut Liability Ins. Co, 230 N W. 314, 210 Iowa 78

Reasonable value of opinion obtained from the attorney held for the jury—Tasker v. Cochrane, 271 P. 503, 94 Cal App 361.

Weight of defendant's attorney's testimony regarding the value of plaintiff's legal services, where defendant's attorney had been associated with plaintiff in some of the actions wherein the services were rendered for which suit is brought, is held a question for the jury—Crary v. Notice of lien as admission of value
In an action by an attorney to recover a reasonable fee for services rendered in conducting an action, the fact that plaintiff filed a notice claiming a lien in such action is not a conclusive admission on his part that the value of his services did not exceed the sum claimed in such notice, but the question of the weight to be given to such notice as an admission is one for the exclusive determination of the jury under all the evidence in the case—Gilmore v McBride, (Alaska) 156 F. 464, 84 C C A. 274

It is error to give a general charge for plaintiff
(1) Where the evidence is conflicting as to the nature of the employment, and as to whether plaintiff had abandoned the case—Haden v. Troy, 46 So. 753, 155 Ala. 270.

(2) In an action by a firm of attorneys to recover a fee, the evidence did not justify the submission of an instruction asking for a dior defendant,[7] as the case may be.

A verdict may be directed for the attorney, where the evidence is clear and conclusive, or is uncontradicted, that he performed the services under his contract and is entitled to his compensation;[8] and where the evidence shows plaintiff entitled to some compensation, not merely nominal, it is error to refuse a general affirmative charge, with hypothesis, not specifying any amount of plaintiff's recovery.[9] The mere fact, however, that there is no evidence offered in opposition to plaintiff's testimony as to the value of his services is not conclusive and does not justify the direction of a verdict for him.[10] On the other hand if the evidence clearly shows that a finding for plaintiff is not warranted, and that, if the jury should make such a finding, defendant would be entitled to a new trial, an instruction for defendant, or not to render a verdict finding for plaintiff, is proper.[11]

d. Instructions

The instructions as to the attorney's right to, and the amount of, his compensation should, without invading the province of the jury, clearly, fully, and accurately state the law applicable to the issues and the evidence.

On the question of an attorney's right to, and the amount of, his compensation, the court may, and should, give instructions covering the different contentions or theories of the parties.[12] These instructions are governed as to their form, requisites, and sufficiency by the general rules applicable in other civil actions;[13] and should protect attorneys who act to the best of their knowledge and skill, even though they are mistaken.[14] They

Denial of motion justified

Where an attorney's action for a fee was defended on the ground of the attorney's misconduct or bad faith, and the evidence relative thereto was uncontradicted, but did not show conduct which, as a matter of law, would preclude recovery, denying motion for a directed verdict against plaintiff, based solely on such alleged misconduct, was not error—Taft v Davidson, (Okl) 45 P (2d) 738

Where dispute as to withdrawal or discharge

In an action for legal services rendered in prosecution of a damage suit, it is error to instruct a verdict for defendant, where plaintiff withdrew from the damage suit after he had completed its preparation, but before the trial, there being a dispute as to whether plaintiff was discharged from further representing defendant in the suit, or whether he withdrew voluntarily, in which event, under the contract, he would not be entitled to recover for the services previously rendered—Ivins v Elbinger Shoe Mfg Co., 14 Ohio App 289

Inconsistent theories

In an action by one attorney against another to recover for services performed at the latter's request, an instruction for plaintiff is erroneous which, after properly presenting the theory of plaintiff's right to recover for his services on the happening of stated contingencies, improperly presents also the theory of his right to a reasonable fee without any contingency—a theory not only inconsistent with the evidence of both parties, but with that on which plaintiff finally submitted his case—Mecartney v. Wallace, 214 Ill App. 618

Instructions on the relation of attorney and client should be given when requested—Enyart v. Orr, 238 P. 29, 78 Colo 6

Liability for reasonable value of services

In an attorney's action for the reasonable value of services performed, tried on the theory that the client was indebted therefor, instead of on a written contract entered into between the parties specifying compensation, where there is evidence tending to show that such contract had been abandoned and a new contract entered into, the court does not err in submitting the case on the theory that the client is liable for the reasonable value of the services.—Dey v. "Advice" as covered by "services"

An instruction, in an attorney's suit for services, reciting "services performed and advice given" is not erroneous in using the word "advice," because of its not being used in the petition, as the term "services" is broad enough to cover "advice"—Klass v. Iowa Mut Liability Ins. Co., 230 N.W. 314, 210 Iowa 78

As to payment

(1) An instruction that defendant must show to the reasonable satisfaction of the jury that any payments claimed as credits were made on the claim asserted in this case, and not for services in other matters, is not erroneous where it is shown that other services were rendered to defendant—Pollak v Winter, 72 So 386, 197 Ala 173

(2) Testimony to the effect that defendant's officer called on plaintiff attorney for a bill for his services, which, a bill being furnished, defendant paid, is sufficient to justify the instruction that, if there was a settlement and defendant paid all that was required of it, plaintiff is not entitled to recover for such period—Shepherd v Inman-Poulsen Lumber Co, 168 P. 601, 86 Or. 652.

Effect of settlement

An instruction that the attorneys could not be deprived of their rights to the stipulated fee by the clients' settling the case is not error, where there is no allegation in the answer of damages from the refusal of plaintiffs to proceed with the litigation and thereby compelling settlement—Snow v. Beard, 162 P. 258, 82 Or 518

Permitting other than contract measure of compensation

Instructions telling the jury in effect that, if services rendered a county by attorneys were rendered under a certain contract, they were entitled to such compensation as would be fair and just, in view of benefits received by the county, are erroneous, where the contract in question fixed the amount of compensation, as permitting a recovery measured otherwise than by the provisions of the contract—Campbell County v. Instructions held misleading

(1) An instruction that an attorney could not recover for services in securing the location of a highway in case the parties contemplated the use of personal influence is misleading in that it assumes all personal solicitation to be improper, ignores evidence tending to show a proper presentation to the commission and its engineers of the merits of the location desired, and would have deprived plaintiff and defendant of an opportunity to influence the judgment of the commission, or its engineers, by proper and lawful means—Cooke v Embry, 123 So. 27, 219 Ala 623.

(2) Where, in an attorney's action against an optionee for examining an abstract, there is evidence that plaintiff's services were to be paid for by the owner, an instruction that, if the services were rendered for defendant and accepted by him, plaintiff is entitled to recover, is misleading—Tyson & Arrington v Thompson, 70 So. 649, 195 Ala. 230.

(3) Where the issue is as to what the terms of the contract are, not whether those terms are reasonable, an instruction that the law requires the utmost good faith on the part of an attorney to his client is inapplicable to the issues, and likely to mislead and prejudice the jury—Freeman v. Hartfield, 158 N.Y S. 350, 172 App Div. 164

(4) In an attorney's action to recover for services rendered to de-

proof on one of the parties,[17] assume the existence of disputed facts,[18] ignore or omit to charge on any matter of evidence or fact in issue,[19] give special prominence to particular parts of the evidence,[20] or exclude material parts thereof from the consideration of the jury,[21] or take from them the determination of essential questions of fact[22]

Where the action is on a written contract of service, the question as to what plaintiff was employed to do should not be submitted, by instructions, hypothetically to the jury.[23]

Financial standing of client. It has been held that an instruction that the measure of plaintiff's compensation depends on defendant's financial standing and plaintiff's knowledge thereof, is erroneous;[24] but it has also been held that it is proper to instruct the jury that such financial standing is a matter to be considered.[25]

Cautionary instruction. It is proper to caution the jury to refrain from entertaining any unjust hostility to lawyers which would prevent them from rendering a verdict according to the law and the evidence;[26] but the trial judge goes beyond his province in referring disparagingly to plaintiff or to the value of his services.[27]

e. Verdict and Findings

General rules control the necessity for, and the form, requisites, and construction of, the verdict or findings.

The general rules which apply to verdicts and findings in civil actions in general control the verdict and findings in an action or proceeding by an attorney for the recovery of compensation, such as with regard to the necessity for, and the requisites and sufficiency of, a verdict or findings, on material issues raised by the pleading and evidence, fendant, a requested instruction that plaintiff would not be bound by any statements as to the charge of his services, made to a third party acting in the interest of the defendant, is misleading—Cadle v. Black, 154 P. 997, 24 Wyo. 43.

Requiring "unequivocal" proof
Where defendant interposes the defense of a special contract, an instruction that his proof of such contract must be clear and "unequivocal" is erroneous as placing an undue burden on defendant—Berry v. Maywood Mut Water Co, No. 1, (Cal App.) 53 P.(2d) 1032.

Failure of authority
Where an action by attorneys for an insurance company, against attorneys of another company for services in securing reduction of a claim against the latter company by settlement, was submitted on the erroneous theory that liability depended on defendant's lack of authority to bind their principal, an instruction that the burden was not on plaintiffs to prove failure of authority, but on defendants to disprove it, was error—Bailey, Oot & Ryan v. Butcher, Tanner & Foster, 148 N.E. 537, 240 N.Y. 323, reversing Bailey v Butcher, 205 N.Y.S. 910, 210 App Div. 812.

Abandonment of contract
An instruction that the burden is on the attorney to establish by a preponderance of the evidence his right to recover under an alleged oral contract to pay him a percentage of the recovery, and that plaintiff is entitled to recover, if the jury find that the contract was entered into between plaintiff and defendant's assignor, and that the terms of the contract were carried out by plaintiff, is correct and is not objectionable as failing to cover the question of abandonment of the contract by plaintiff, as it necessarily covers that proposition—Hornish v Overton, 221 N.W. 483, 206 Iowa 780

Letter accompanying statement
In an action to recover for professional services, it is error to instruct the jury that they may disregard plaintiffs' act in sending defendant a statement of their charges, and that plaintiffs were not bound by such act, without including in such instruction any reference to plaintiffs' letter accompanying the statement, as the effect of the account and the letter was a question of law for the court—Jeger v Julius Kessler & Co, 218 Ill.App. 39.

Withdrawing issue
(1) In a suit for fees for administering an estate, an instruction that plaintiff cannot recover for ordinary services to a trust estate, as distinguished from the estate, and, if entitled to recover at all, can only be allowed a specified amount, as provided by statute, for handling the small estate, may properly be refused where the bulk of the estate passes under a deed of trust, since it withdraws the issue whether fees for both estates, on the basis regarded by the legislature as reasonable in ordinary probate matters, are reasonable—Treadwell v. Nickel, 228 P. 25, 194 Cal 243

(2) Where plaintiff testified that he refused to sign the memorandum of agreement because it omitted a provision for additional compensation, while defendant testified that plaintiff wrote the memorandum himself, that defendant signed it and left it, and that it contained the whole agreement, a charge that, plaintiff having written the agreement and presented it to defendant for signature, it became a binding contract when defendant signed it, without further acceptance by plaintiff, is erroneous, as taking from the jury the determination of a contested issue—Freeman v Hartfield, 158 N.Y.S. 350, 172 App.Div. 164

to support a judgment,[28] the submission of special issues,[29] and the construction and effect of the verdict or findings,[30] it being a rule that the findings must be so construed as to support the judgment where such construction is reasonable.[31] Special findings must be consistent with the general verdict.[32]

Where several causes of action are united in the same petition, a verdict must be found and damages awarded on each count separately, and a general verdict will be arrested if the error is called to the attention of the trial court by appropriate motion.[33] Where, in an action by associated counsel for services rendered, it appears that one of the counsel, by reason of disqualification, is not entitled to any compensation, defendant is entitled to a finding of the value of the services of the counsel not disqualified, independent of the services rendered by the disqualified associate.[34]

§ 206. —— Judgment, Enforcement Thereof and Review

The rules governing judgments in civil actions, generally, apply to the judgment in an action for an attorney's compensation.

The rules applicable to judgments in civil actions

28. Williams v. Bevis, 278 P. 193, 152 Wash. 469, followed in 279 P. 1119, 153 Wash. 701—6 C.J. p. 765 notes 59, 60.

Exact language or form not required

"Of course there ought to be findings on the material issues raised by the pleadings and evidence; but, if it appears that there are in substance such findings, it is not necessary that they should be in the exact language of the pleadings, or in any particular form."—Harlan v. Lambert, 125 P. 1079, 1081, 19 Cal. App. 349.

As to payment from proceeds

The court's finding that the attorney's compensation is payable only from the proceeds of sale of a corporation's mine is not erroneous as an arbitrary construction of a written contract contrary to its express terms, in view of a supplementary oral agreement—Williams v. Bevis, 278 P. 193, 152 Wash. 469, followed in 279 P. 1119, 153 Wash. 701.

Excessiveness of fee

In the absence of testimony that the fee is unreasonable or excessive, the court may not determine that a contingent fee expressed in a contract is so excessive as to be unconscionable—Board of Education of Oklahoma City v. Thurman, 247 P. 996, 121 Okl. 108.

Findings held sufficient to show implied promise of client to pay reasonable compensation for attorney's services.—Webster v. Kelly, 175 N.E. 69, 274 Mass. 564.

In a suit on an oral contract for the payment of fees, the trial court, in construing the contract to the effect that payment was dependent on the sufficiency of the proceeds of a mortgage sale, improperly denies recovery without finding that the proceeds were insufficient to pay such amount—Rieger v. Smith, (Tex.Civ. App.) 2 S.W.(2d) 883.

Necessity

In a suit to foreclose a mortgage securing a note given by defendants for an attorney's fee in a will contest, where it was alleged the note was given as the result of the undue influence of the attorney, the determination by the court of a reasonable fee in the will contest was necessary to show whether the contract between the attorney and defendants was fair and regular.—Magee v. Brenneman, 206 P. 37, 188 Cal. 562.

29. Greenwood v. Senter, (Tex.Civ. App.) 44 S.W.(2d) 504, affirmed in part and reversed on other grounds in part (Com.App.) 61 S.W.(2d) 812.

As to reasonable value of services

It is proper to ask the jury to find what, if anything, is the reasonable value of the services for which the attorney is suing, where the jury are also asked to find whether the parties had agreed on a fee as claimed by the client.—Greenwood v. Senter, (Tex.Civ.App.) 44 S.W.(2d) 504, affirmed in part and reversed on other grounds in part (Com.App.) 61 S.W.(2d) 812.

30. Mo.—Blodgett v. Koenig, 284 S.W. 505, 314 Mo. 262.

Va.—City of South Norfolk v. Wolcott, 125 S.E. 687, 140 Va. 611.

Alternative finding

Where the trial judge made the alternative finding that the attorney who was sued by the client could not recover for rent, which finding was to take effect only if the trial judge was in error in ruling that the attorney could not pursue set-off, a finding that there was no merit in the attorney's claim for rent became effective, since the trial judge was in error in ruling that there could be no set-off—Ryder v. Warren, (Mass.) 3 N.E.(2d) 221.

As recovery on contract

Where an attorney sues on an express contract for fees, and the court instructs a finding for defendant if he did not agree, to pay the sum claimed, a finding for plaintiff on the issues is a recovery on the contract, and not on a quantum meruit, notwithstanding the verdict is for much less than the contract price—Blodgett v. Koenig, 284 S.W. 505, 314 Mo. 262.

Conclusiveness

In an action for the reasonable value of services, a finding that the services were of the reasonable value of a specified amount and a judgment for that amount is conclusive of the principal amount plaintiff is entitled to recover—Shellenberger v. Baker, 281 P. 1102, 101 Cal.App. 615.

Implied finding

In an action by an attorney to recover a fee under an express contract, the trial court's finding that the attorney had effected a settlement for the client entitling the attorney to the contingent fee agreed on implied a finding that the attorney was reasonably diligent in pressing the client's claim—Foster v. Graham, 59 P.(2d) 293, 186 Wash. 701.

Jury's answer, "No", to a special interrogatory, "Did defendant in fixing plaintiff's fee act in good faith, and upon consideration and advice," does not mean that defendant in fixing the fee did not act in good faith, in that he did not give the matter consideration or take advice, but is a general finding that defendant acted in bad faith—Foster v. Young, 156 P. 476, 172 Cal. 317.

31. Merrill v. Gunnison, 79 P. 67, 145 Cal. 544—6 C.J. p. 765 note 60.

32. Ind.—Hauss v. Niblack, 80 Ind. 407.

Iowa.—Cullison v. Lindsay, 78 N.W. 847, 108 Iowa 124.

Special finding and general verdict held not inconsistent

Special jury finding that the attorney's fee was fixed by contract, and a general verdict allowing less than the contract sum, are not inconsistent, since the jury doubtless considered the contract champertous and attorney's service reasonably worth only the amount allowed by the general verdict—Clancy v. Kelly, 166 N.W. 583, 182 Iowa 1207.

33. Shuck v. Pfenninghausen, 74 S.W. 881, 101 Mo.App. 697.

34. Bryant v. Lewis, (Tex.Civ.App.) 27 S.W.(2d) 604.

in general apply to the judgment in an action or proceeding for the recovery of an attorney's compensation.[35] Where in an action for a specified attorney's fee, and to have a lien declared on defendant's land, the jury return a verdict on an issue of what is a reasonable fee, the court may render a judgment for the amount of the verdict,[36] and, in the exercise of its equity powers, decree a lien against defendant's land for the satisfaction thereof.[37] In a suit in equity by an attorney against several defendants to recover his fee out of certain funds, he is entitled to a decree only against the defendant who is shown to have possession of such funds.[38]

Where the jury fixes the reasonable value of the services for which the attorney is suing at less than the amount the client has already paid, the client is entitled to recover a judgment for the difference.[39]

VI. LIEN OF ATTORNEY

§ 207. Nature of and Right to Lien

a. Nature of lien
b. Right to lien
c. Client's remedy against imposition

a. Nature of Lien

Attorneys' liens are of two kinds; one is called a general, retaining, or possessory lien; the other is called a special, particular, or charging lien.

An attorney's lien is of two kinds; one is called the general, retaining, or possessory lien, and the other the special, particular, or charging lien[40] These liens are clearly distinguishable as may be observed by comparing their respective natures as hereinafter specifically discussed in §§ 210, 211, and this distinction has been specifically adverted to by the courts in particular cases.[41] Moreover, in noticing such distinction, it has also been observed that rules applicable to one of these two types of liens are not necessarily applicable to the other type.[42]

Right to a lien may exist in the absence of an agreement therefor, but cannot be created by the mere fact that the attorney is entitled to be paid or by the fact that his status is that of attorney, nor may a lien based on a statute be extended beyond the fair intendment thereof.

Aside from whatever right an attorney may have to a particular type of lien, or his right to assert a lien under particular circumstances, all of which rights are considered in more detail in subsequent sections of this Title, it should be observed generally that the relationship of attorney and client is the foundation of the right to an attorney's lien,[43] and that, although a lien may be asserted by an attorney in the absence of an agreement with his client that there should be a lien,[44] an attorney's right to a lien for his services cannot be based on the mere fact that he is entitled to payment for such services,[45] or merely by reason of his status as an attorney at law.[46] Moreover,

Accounting judgment

Where defendant, owner of a farm, agreed to give plaintiff, his attorney, one half of the amount for which the farm sold in excess of a fixed sum, on an accounting defendant should have the value agreed on between himself and plaintiff for his farm, with interest, etc, and neither the fact that defendant procured papers relating to the transaction, nor the employment by him of other counsel, justified an accounting judgment fixing the profits at the difference between the agreed value of defendant's farm and the value fixed for a farm for which it was exchanged—Child v. Mastin, 204 N.W. 947, 164 Minn. 217.

Allowance of fee in suit to foreclose trust deed

Where, in a suit by a bank against attorneys to foreclose a trust deed given to secure notes executed by them, it appears that the attorneys had recovered judgment against the bank for a certain fee, and, as a means of collecting the fee, had caused the land which they had recovered to be sold at an execution sale and they became the purchasers thereat, the court may treat the title as being in the bank and allow the fee as a credit, thus, in effect, treating the judgment and sale thereunder as a nullity—Poe v Walker, 37 S W (2d) 866, 183 Ark 659.

An attorney obtaining on a contingent basis appropriations by congress

where an attorney's right to a lien exists by virtue of a statute, such right cannot be extended beyond the fair intendment of such statute.[47] Nevertheless, where a statute authorizes an attorney's lien, such lien is cumulative, rather than exclusive of preëxisting rights or remedies which an attorney may have to collect compensation,[48] and it has been held that an attorney's lien on papers in a suit arises under common law rather than by statute.[49]

Scope of lien restricted by relation. Attorneys' liens apply solely to the personal relation existing between an attorney and his client, and may not be extended to or affect the rights of other persons who may be interested in the litigation but who have not employed such attorney.[50]

What law governs. The laws of the state in which an attorney is employed and in which suit is brought control as to whether a lien exists in favor of such attorney.[51]

c. Client's Remedy against Imposition

A client may in a proper case be entitled to relief from the imposition of a lien.

A client may be entitled to appropriate relief from an improperly imposed attorney's lien.[52] to contractors who had lost money in government work was not entitled to a lien on the funds appropriated merely by reason of his relation as an attorney at law—Stansell v Roach, 246 S.W. 520, 147 Tenn. 183, 29 A.L.R. 143.

Principal basis for allowance

"A principal basis for allowing a lien to an attorney at law is that it is deemed both natural and wise that the lawyer be secured in the fruits of his professional labor, since the proper administration of justice is essential to the well-being of the public which cannot be secured without an intelligent and prosperous bar"—Stansell v Roach, 246 S.W. 520, 527, 147 Tenn. 183, 29 A.L.R. 143.

Security of attorney's rights

In a suit by a client and grantees against an attorney to quiet title, the attorney's rights have been held to be as secure without a statutory attorney's lien as with one—Graeber v. McMullin, (C.C.A.Colo.) 56 F.(2d) 497, certiorari denied McMullin v Graeber, 53 S.Ct. 9, 287 U.S. 603, 77 L.Ed. 525.

Lien in action to recover land

The lien created by St. § 107, for plaintiff's attorney in an action for the recovery of lands, to secure payment of fee in the absence of contract, being purely statutory, should not be given a wider scope than is provided by the statute—Charles v. Whitt, 218 S.W. 994, 187 Ky. 77.

Lien on plaintiff's cause of action

Laws of the state in which an attorney was employed and suit was brought were held to be controlling on the question of an attorney's lien on plaintiff's cause of action.—Lehigh & N. E. R. Co. v. Finnerty, (C.C.A.N.J.) 61 F.(2d) 289, certiorari denied 53 S.Ct. 292, 287 U.S. 668, 77 L.Ed. 576.

Making agreement in state

An attorney could not claim a lien on a death action, under Ky.St. § 107, because the agreement was made in Kentucky, when deceased had lived in West Virginia, which was the situs of claim for death—Davis v. Whitt, 277 S.W. 311, 211 Ky. 142.

Injury and signing of contract outside state

In an action under the Attorneys' Lien Act of Illinois, the question at issue is not affected by the fact that the injury, constituting the basis of the suit in which the attorney's services were to be rendered was suffered in Indiana, and the contract between the parties that there should be an attorney's lien was signed in Indiana.—Smith v. American Bridge Co., 194 Ill.App. 500.

Under Employers' Liability Act

(1) A state statute providing for an attorney's lien to secure attorney's fees is applicable to cases brought under the Federal Employers' Liability Act.—Noell v Missouri Pac. R. Co., 74 S.W.(2d) 7, 335 Mo. 687, 94 A.L.R. 684, followed in 74 S.W.(2d) 14—Mytton v Missouri Pac. R. Co., (Mo.App.) 211 S.W. 111.

(2) Accordingly, where a cause of action under the Federal Employers' Liability Act arose in Arkansas, bringing of action in Missouri caused a lien of a Missouri attorney to attach to the cause of action.—Noell v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., supra.

(3) Further, as the Federal Employers' Liability Act authorizes actions in state courts and makes state practice applicable, Minn.Gen.St. (1913) § 4955, giving attorneys a lien on a cause of action of their clients, is properly applied to an action brought in courts of Minnesota under such federal act where defendant settled the claim with the client.—Dickinson v Stiles, 38 S.Ct. 415, 246 U.S. 631, 62 L.Ed. 908, affirming Holloway v. Dickinson, 163 N.W. 791, 137 Minn. 410.

Lien by local law only recognized by federal courts

The federal courts recognize no lien at common law in behalf of an attorney beyond that given by the local law.—Sun Life Assur. Co. of Canada v. Casanova, (C.C.A.Porto Rico) 260 F. 449—6 C.J. p. 766 note 73.

War-time control statutes and orders thereunder

Neither federal statutes under which the government took over railroads for war purposes nor an order of the president or director general thereunder suspended a state law authorizing an attorney's lien in a railway employee's personal injury action—Stephens v. Davis, 36 P.(2d) 316, 140 Kan. 220, certiorari denied Morganthau v. Stephens, 55 S.Ct. 542, 294 U.S. 720, 79 L.Ed. 1252, time within which to file petition for rehearing extended 55 S.Ct. 652.

Equity court of original jurisdiction may on proper showing cancel an attorney's lien.—Vivian Collieries Co. v. Cahall, 110 N.E. 672, 184 Ind. 473.

Decree freeing estate from, and injunction against, lien

A client was held to be entitled to a decree declaring interest in an estate free from an attorney's lien, and to an injunction against assertion of such lien—Flagler v Spellman, (C.C.A.N.Y.) 15 F.(2d) 292.

§ 208. Statutory Provisions

Questions relating to the validity, construction, and effect of statutory provisions authorizing attorneys' liens have been passed on as indicated hereunder.

The validity of statutes securing an attorney's lien has been generally affirmed by the courts in states where such acts have been adopted,[53] unless they operate as a restriction on the exercise of vested rights or the right of freedom of contract.[54]

Construction. Although statutes securing an attorney's lien are ordinarily regarded as remedial in character and should be construed liberally in aid of the object sought by the legislature, which was to furnish security to attorneys by giving them a lien on the subject of the action,[55] and other statutes may be considered in determining whether an attorney is entitled to a lien,[56] there is authority for the view that attorney's lien statutes are to be strictly construed.[57] At any rate, in the absence of some legislative expression to the contrary, such a statute will be construed prospectively only and will not be given a retroactive operation or effect.[58]

Operation and effect. Although the liability of a party, against whom an attorney proceeds on behalf of his own client, is not affected by the provisions of an attorney's lien statute,[59] and a statute providing for an attorney's lien to secure payment of his compensation does not preclude an attorney and his client from making any contract they may see fit regarding such compensation,[60] a statute creating an attorney's lien has been held to repeal an earlier statute giving an attorney a right of action for his fees against his client.[61]

Domicile of decedent governing suit to enjoin

A suit to enjoin an attorney from asserting a lien, under an alleged champertous contract, on an estate, was held to be controlled by the law of the state where the testator was domiciled, and where the personal estate had its situs—Flagler v Spellman, (C C A N Y.) 15 F.(2d) 292.

Removal of lien as cloud on judgment

(1) In the absence of statutory provision for the removal of an attorney's lien as a cloud on a judgment, courts must exercise their equitable jurisdiction to give relief from unwarranted claims under such liens—Clarke v. Harris, 132 N E 6, 76 Ind App. 185.

(2) Moreover, such relief may be given in a summary manner on reasonable notice by petition, filed in the cause in which the judgment was rendered, by either the attorney or his client, so long as the judgment remains unsatisfied, or the proceeds thereof are in transitu—Clarke v. Harris, supra.

Jurisdiction of motion to strike lien claim

When attorneys file a lien claim and notice of the asserted lien is served on opposing counsel, the court before which a cause is pending has jurisdiction to determine motion to strike the lien claim—Oppenud v. Bussey, (Okl.) 46 P.(2d) 319.

Not contrary to public policy favoring settlement

A statute providing for an attorney's lien on a client's cause of action was held not unconstitutional as being against public policy of favoring settlement—Noell v Missouri Pac R Co, 74 S W.(2d) 7, 335 Mo 687, 94 A L R 684, followed in 74 S W (2d) 14.

Statute extending lien to suits for recovery of realty

(1) A statute extending an attorney's lien to suits for recovery of realty is not remedial and does not apply to past transactions—Hartley v. Hand, 135 So. 316, 223 Ala. 201

(2) An attorney's petition to intervene in a suit, brought by a client before the statute extending attorneys' liens to realty became effective, to enforce a lien on complainant's interest in decedent's realty, was accordingly held to be properly dismissed—Hartley v. Hand, supra.

Kirby Dig. § 4457, giving a right of action to attorneys against litigants for a reasonable fee, where the client compromises, was held to be repealed by Act May 31, 1909 (L. [1909] p 893), creating lien upon cause of action.—St. Louis, I M. & S Ry Co v. Freeman, 179 S W. 648, 120 Ark. 389.

Moreover, a statute giving an attorney a lien on the subject matter of a suit has been held to change a previously existing public policy in so far as such statute deprives a party of control over lawsuits.[62]

§ 209. Person Entitled

Attorney's liens exist only in favor of licensed attorneys employed under a valid contract, but may in proper cases be claimed by licensed attorneys of record or by attorneys not of record.

An attorney's lien exists only in favor of a regularly licensed attorney,[63] employed under a valid contract, express or implied.[64] On the other hand, a lien cannot exist in favor of an attorney whose employment is tainted with illegality.[65] Nevertheless, that one stood in the relation of a stockholder as well as attorney to his client may not preclude the assertion of a charging lien.[66]

Attorneys of record, not of record, or of counsel. An attorney of record in the particular action in which judgment or recovery is had may be entitled to a charging lien.[67] Moreover, under particular statutes it has been held that an attorney not of record in a particular action may nevertheless be entitled to a lien for his services.[68] Further an assistant counsel may claim a lien when his employment is authorized by the client,[69] un-

§ 210. Retaining Lien

A retaining lien is the right of the attorney to retain possession of a client's documents, money, or other property which comes into the hands of the attorney professionally, until a general balance due him for professional services is paid.

The general or retaining lien of an attorney is his right to retain possession of all documents, money, or other property of his client coming into his hands professionally until a general balance due him for professional services is paid.[72]

While some question has been raised as to the correctness of the term "lien" so applied,[73] the right itself has never been denied.[74]

Limitation to interest of client. A retaining lien is commensurate with the right which the client delivering the property has in it.[75]

Possession essential. In order that a retaining lien may exist, it is essential that the attorney claiming such lien have possession of something to which such lien can attach.[76]

§ 211. Charging Lien

a. In general
b. Agreement for lien

a. In General

A charging lien is the equitable right of an attorney to have fees and costs due him for services in a particular suit secured by the judgment or recovery in such suit, is based on equitable considerations, and differs from ordinary liens in that possession is not essential to the charging lien.

The special or charging lien of an attorney is an equitable right to have the fees and costs due to him for services in a suit secured to him out of the judgment or recovery in that particular suit.[77]

The lien is based on the natural equity that plaintiff should not be allowed to appropriate the whole of a judgment in his favor without paying thereout for the services of his attorney in obtaining such judgment.[78]

Since possession, which is essential to ordinary liens, as noted in the title Liens § 8 [37 C J p 325 note 76], is not essential to the existence of an attorney's charging lien,[79] such lien, strictly speaking, did not exist at common law.[80] In fact the use of the term "lien" in this connection has been criticized as inaccurate, and the right of the attorney has been said to be merely a claim to the equitable interference of the court.[81]

In some jurisdictions there are cases holding that the charging lien of an attorney does not exist,[82] although such lien now exists in most jurisdictions either by statute or by virtue of judicial decision.[83]

Lien upheld on theory that attorney's services and skill created fund

The right of an attorney to payment of fees earned in the prosecution of litigation to judgment, although usually denominated a lien, rests on the equity of such attorney to be paid out of the judgment by him obtained, and is upheld on the theory that his services and skill created the fund—Cohen v Goldberger, 141 N E 656, 109 Ohio St 22.

Services for minor's benefit not necessaries

(1) An attorney is not entitled to a lien on a settlement for injuries to a minor client, where the attorney was not employed by the guardian or curator under the direction of the probate court, and where the attorney's services were not shown to be "necessaries" within the meaning of the law relating to minors.—Fenn v. Hart Dairy Co, (Mo App) 33 S W (2d) 120, 126, 127.

(2) "The next friend and the attorney for the next friend of a minor may consider it advisable and in the interest of the minor to bring a suit in his behalf as soon as possible after the cause of action in his favor arises, but in so far as the legal necessity for so doing is concerned, we believe it cannot properly and accurately be said that there is any such necessity as would authorize a court to disregard all the law enacted for the protection of minors and hold them to be bound by contracts for attorney's fees made by their next friends."—Fenn v Hart Dairy Co, supra

(3) "We believe that 'the laborer is worthy of his hire,' but the policy of the law of this state is so clearly defined that when an attorney undertakes to represent a minor plaintiff in the bringing of a suit and wishes to secure for himself the benefits of the attorney's lien statutes to protect his fee for services, he must clearly plead facts showing that his employment was necessary to protect the rights of the minor, or he must show that he was employed by a duly appointed guardian or curator of such minor under the direction and authority of the probate court"—Fenn v. Hart Dairy Co, supra.

Existence of subject matter as prerequisite. In order that a valid charging lien may exist, it is essential, that there exist some subject matter to which such lien may attach.[87] Moreover, in the dian affairs, the attorneys were not entitled to have an attorney's lien declared and enforced on the basis of quantum meruit.—In re Darch, 265 N.Y.S. 86, 147 Misc. 836

(2) Where an attorney performed services in the prosecution of a personal injury claim, which was later settled without his knowledge, his claim for compensation cannot be presented as a lien on the amount of the settlement, where his contingent fee contract with claimant is void, but must be presented on the basis of quantum meruit.—Filipiak v Zintak, 264 Ill.App. 392.

Dismissal

An attorney's lien for services rendered to plaintiff does not attach to an order of dismissal of action, notwithstanding the order is a judgment subject to the control of the court, since it is not a judgment in favor of plaintiff nor one which has a pecuniary value to plaintiff.—Universal Oil Products Co. v Standard Oil Co. of Indiana, (D.C.Mo.) 6 F.Supp. 37, affirmed (C.C.A.) German v. Universal Oil Products Co., 77 F.(2d) 70

(2) A decree granting letters of administration, but not determining the right of the petitioner to any part of the decedent's estate, but merely his right to act as administrator, does not constitute proceeds to which the lien of petitioner's attorney can attach.—In re Nocton's Estate, 162 N.Y.S. 215

Defendant held to have no interest to which lien could attach

In an action by a coal company to declare a trust in property purchased by defendant from funds received as secret rebates while defendant was plaintiff's sales manager, defendant's interest in the property having been exhausted by the transfer of title from defendant to plaintiff, no interest therein remained in him to which a lien could attach in favor of his attorneys.—Stover v Atlantic Ice & Coal Corporation, 125 S.E. 837, 159 Ga. 357.

No attorney's lien can attach to funds held on interpleader in favor of the attorney of claimant prior to a judgment finding such claimant entitled to them.—Remelin v Butterworth, 152 N.E. 193, 20 Ohio App. 356.

Where nothing collected

Where an attorney was retained by a temporary administratrix to collect moneys on deposit belonging to the estate, but collected nothing in the actions he brought, which did not come to trial, there was nothing to which a charging lien could attach.—In re Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 188 N.Y.S. 373, 196 App.Div. 639.

(1) Attorneys for one partner adjudged to be indebted to the other could have lien only to the extent that their client had something coming to him from partnership funds on final settlement.—Dunn v. Bleeck, 286 N.Y.S. 402, 246 App.Div. 382

(2) Where defendant, in an equitable suit to offset mutual judgments, owed plaintiff on certain notes at the time defendant obtained judgment against plaintiff, and plaintiff later obtained a judgment on such notes, defendant's attorneys, in the action to offset the mutual judgments, could not have a lien for their fees

absence of some statutory provision providing that an attorney's charging lien may exist on a cause of action, such lien cannot arise on the naked cause of action of his client.[88] Further, a statute providing for a charging lien on a client's cause of action, claim, or counterclaim does not authorize such lien where there is no cause of action, claim, or counterclaim.[89]

Attorney regarded as equitable assignee. An attorney who has a charging lien for his services is, to the extent of such services, to be regarded as an equitable assignee of the judgment or funds produced by his efforts.[90]

Notice to client that lien may be claimed. An attorney's right to assert a lien to secure payment of compensation does not require that he should have notified his client that such lien might be claimed.[91]

Attorney's authority to begin suit as condition precedent to lien. The existence of a charging lien on a cause of action depends on the attorney's authority to begin the suit.[92]

Where action does not reach verdict, report, decision, or judgment. Where attorneys are given a charging lien on the cause of action of their clients, such lien may arise, notwithstanding the action never reaches a verdict, report, decision, or judgment.[93] On the other hand, a statute giving a charging lien to attorneys "on all judgments obtained by them" does not confer a lien on an attorney, where proceedings brought by him on behalf of his client do not result in a judgment.[94]

Right to retaining lien not condition precedent to right to charging lien. That an attorney could not claim a retaining lien may not preclude his asserting a charging lien.[95]

Solvency of client immaterial to validity of lien. The validity of an attorney's charging lien created by statute does not depend on the solvency or insolvency of the client.[96]

Statute conferring charging lien as not abolishing common-law remedies. A statute conferring an attorney's charging lien does not abolish previously existing common-law remedies of an attorney for realizing fees for his services.[97]

Against whom lien may be charged. An attorney's charging lien may be valid as against both the client and his attaching creditors,[98] and such lien may be charged against the receiver of a client for whom the attorney has performed services.[99] Moreover, that an allowance has been made for counsel fees to be paid by a third person may not affect the lien of an attorney as against his own client.[1] However, an attorney with notice of an innocent third person's interest in specific property may not be permitted, as against such third person, to assert a charging lien in conflict with such interest;[2] nor may the mere fact that one benefits by the services of an attorney on behalf of his client render the person so incidentally benefited liable to a lien by such attorney.[3] At all events, a charging lien authorized by statute, may be asserted only against persons contemplated by the particular statute,[4] and a state is not bound by a charging lien of an attorney who recovers a judgment for the state under a statute which does not expressly bind the state.[5]

b. Agreement for Lien

A valid agreement between a client and his attorney may, in accordance with rules discussed hereunder, give rise to a charging lien.

An agreement between attorney and client that the attorney shall have a lien on the judgment is decisive as to the existence of the lien[6] and constitutes a valid equitable assignment of the judgment pro tanto which attaches to the judgment as soon as it is entered.[7] Moreover, a charging lien

Agreement constituting equitable lien, not assignment

(1) An agreement between an attorney and client that the former shall have a share of the fruits of the action is not an assignment of such share, but merely creates an equitable lien on the amount received by the client—Nichols v Orr 166 P 561, 63 Colo 333, 2 A L R. 449

Becker, (Or) 58 P.(2d) 620.

General retainer executed by a legatee gave rise only to an attorney's lien which, on ordinary principles, is for the reasonable value of the services rendered.—In re Kitching's Will, 253 N.Y.S. 113, 141 Misc. 704.

Particular contracts held to create lien

(1) Where the administratrix of decedent employed attorneys, agreeing that they should receive one half of the recovery, it was held that, although signed by the administratrix as an individual, yet, as she could maintain an action only in her representative capacity, such contract gave the attorneys a lien under the attorneys' lien statute, and might be enforced against defendant company which made settlement with the administratrix independent of her attorneys—Johnson v Missouri Pac R Co., 222 S.W. 734, 144 Ark. 469.

(2) A contract between an attorney and a client for fifty per cent of the amount recovered and half the attorney's expenses is a contract including expenses as part of the fee, so that they come within the attorney's lien statute (Acts [1909] p 892)—Midland Valley R Co v. Johnson, 215 S W. 665, 140 Ark. 174, 7 A L R 1007.

(3) Where a sole heir retained attorneys to represent her in proceedings to remove her as temporary administratrix and to have another made permanent administrator, under an agreement whereby the attorneys were to receive ten per cent of any war insurance paid over to her and she made a settlement with adversary parties, in her subsequent suit to set aside the settlement, where the insurance funds were impounded, the attorneys were held to be entitled on intervention to a lien for their fees, since the temporary administratrix employed the attorneys in her individual, as well as administrative, capacity—Pharr v McDonald, 180 S E 344, 180 Ga. 777

(4) A contract for an attorney's fee for one third of the amount recovered in a workmen's compensation law case gives the attorney a privilege on the judgment recovered under the Workmen's Compensation Act of (1914) § 21 subsec 2, as amended, and Act (1906) No. 124—Burton v. Burke, 110 A. 609, 43 R I. 188.

(7) An attorney for decedent and administrator, suing for insurance on a contingent fee contract, had a lien on the amount recovered—In re Agee's Estate, 252 P. 891, 69 Utah 130, 50 A L R. 641.

(2) Accordingly, a contingent fee contract between an attorney and a client, imposing a duty on the attorney to perform services, accomplish the desired result, in consideration of the client's holding the cause of action subject to the services of the attorney and his right to share in the proceeds, and to convert the cause of action into the proceeds and divide them with the attorney was held not a power of attorney terminable at the client's death but a bilateral contract creating an equitable lien in favor of the attorney.—Lewis v. Where a life beneficiary's interest was jeopardized by an investment in a mortgage on property in which a trustee was interested, endangering a loss through litigation with such trustee, an attorney, who rendered services protecting the beneficiary's interest under an agreement with the beneficiary whereby he was to be reimbursed out of a trust fund, was held to be entitled to a lien on the trust fund.—Strong v. Dutcher, 174 N.Y.S. 352, 186 App. Div 307

Stipulation for attorney's fees on note

An attorney's fees, stipulated in a note, constitute a lien on the dividend declared on a claim against the payment of an attorney's fees. On the other hand, there exists authority to the effect that no charging lien can exist in the absence of an express agreement out of which an equitable assignment can arise[11] and a mere naked promise to pay an attorney out of a particular fund, unaccompanied by any words of transfer or the giving of any power or authority over the fund, may not operate to create a lien thereon.[12] At any rate, a charging lien which is not authorized by the terms of a contract existing between attorney and client may not be recognized where such contract is relied on by the attorney.[13] Ultimately the question whether or not a particular agreement creates a lien is a matter of construction.[14] A charging lien may not be inferred from mere silence.[15]

§ 212. Assignment of Lien

The general or retaining lien of an attorney is not assignable, although a claim for services or a lien for services on a sum collected may be assigned under certain circumstances.

An attorney's possessory lien is not assignable and is lost by an attempt at assignment.[17] More-

Particular contracts held not to create lien

(1) A contract, providing merely for a contingent fee for legal services in an action for, and which results in, money damages for his client, gives the attorney no lien or interest in the judgment, in the absence of terms constituting in legal effect a transfer of part of the claim or judgment—McGown v. Dalzell, 236 P. 941, 72 Cal App 197.

(2) A contract whereby a client agrees to pay his attorney a "further fee of 15 per cent. upon the amount recovered" does not give the attorney an equitable lien on the fund when recovered.—Taylor v. Wharton, 43 App D C. 104, certiorari denied 35 S Ct. 793, 238 U S. 631, 59 L Ed 1498

(3) Where a wife brought an action to set aside a settlement, and discontinued the action and conveyed the property in controversy to her husband, the court was not empowered to establish a lien on the land in favor of the wife's attorneys under the wife's contract to give the attorneys a portion of her interest in the property for their services, in the absence of a showing of conveyance to the attorneys of such interest—Kelly v. Kelly, (Tex Civ App) 257 S W. 992.

(4) A client's agreement to pay an attorney one thousand five hundred dollars for services in obtaining a return of six thousand five hundred dollars forfeited to a city for failure to perform a contract, to be paid out of the six thousand five hundred dollars, if and when returned, was not an equitable assignment, nor did it give the attorney an equitable lien.—Flanagan v. Conners, 204 N.Y.S. 823, 123 Misc. 236

(5) A particular retainer agreement in an action for personal injury was held not to purport to give a lien, and not to constitute an assignment of part of the fund, but was at most an agreement to pay plaintiff out of the recovery—Weinstein v Seidmann, 159 N.Y.S. 371, 173 App Div. 219

(7) An agreement by a client to pay an attorney a stated percentage of any amount recovered from the estate of a testator above what was left her by the will did not constitute a legal or equitable assignment of any part of her interest in the estate to such attorney.—Spellman v. Bankers' Trust Co, (C C A N.Y.) 6 F (2d) 799.

(8) An agreement between the president of a corporation against whom bankruptcy proceedings were instituted, and its attorney, that the attorney should be compensated out of the alleged bankrupt's estate, could not affect the rights of the purchaser of all the assets of the company, under a contract made with the assistance of the attorney and not preserving his rights—In re Exposition Catering Co, (C C A N. Where attorney cannot bring suit required by contract

Where an attorney contracted with an employee, injured in another state, to bring a common-law action against the employer for such injury, which action resulted in a judgment for defendant, after which the employee filed a claim under the Workmen's Compensation Act of such state, and received a lump settlement, it was held that, since the employee and employer were deemed to have accepted the provisions of the compensation act of such state by their failure to be exempted therefrom, under Rev St (1919) § 1162, the attorney, being without right to bring suit at common law, could not acquire a lien for his services under the contract—Taylor v. Integrity Mut. Casualty Co., 265 S. W 881, 216 Mo App 599

Where no collection made as contemplated by contract

An attorney's lien, under Smith-Hurd St Annot. c 13 § 14 (Cahill Rev St [1933] c 13 par 13), cannot be based on an agreement to pay an attorney a sum equal to one third of any amount "collected" from a claim on an insurance policy and assigning him one third of any judgment thereafter recovered in the case, which employment was for the purpose of obtaining the benefits for the insured, during his lifetime, where the evidence shows that no judgment has been recovered and, while the insurer had agreed to settle, no collection had been made before the death of insured—Berkos v Ætna Life Ins Co, 279 Ill App 243

over, where an attorney who prosecutes a suit has no lien for his fees or disbursements until after a final judgment has been entered (infra § 216), he cannot protect himself for the amount of his fee by an assignment.[18] The rule is held to be otherwise, however, as to assignment of a claim for services or of the lien for such services on the sum collected,[19] where the assignment carries with it no breach of the attorney's duty to preserve his client's confidence inviolate.[20]

Partial assignment. An assignment by an attorney of a portion of an indivisible claim is invalid and the assignee obtains no interest therein.[21]

§ 213. Services and Fees Covered

a. Under retaining lien
b. Under charging lien

a. Under Retaining Lien

A retaining lien secures not only the costs and charges of a particular case, but also extends to a general balance due the attorney by his client.

An attorney's retaining lien extends, under most of the modern decisions, to property in the attorney's hands, not only so as to cover costs and charges in the particular case in which the money was collected, but also to the extent of the general balance due to the attorney from the client,[22] and the fact that the services rendered are in behalf of an executor or administrator is generally held immaterial.[23]

b. Under Charging Lien

A charging lien secures only fees and costs due for services in the particular suit in which a judgment is rendered

In accord with the definition of this lien (supra § 211) a charging lien of an attorney is confined strictly to fees and costs due for services in the particular suit in which the judgment is rendered,[24] and such lien may cover an attorney's fees and dis-

Reimbursement in absence of right to enforce lien

(1) Where a member of a firm of attorneys, four years after he had made an agreement with an assignee of a cause of action to continue litigation for one third of the amount recovered, bought the claim of such law firm for services rendered by the firm in the action prior to its assignment, it was held that he could not enforce the assigned lien for services.—In re Leopold, 175 N Y S 138, 186 App Div. 872, affirmed 123 N E 876, 226 N Y 672.

Particular matter or action and all others

(1) An attorney's right to retain a client's documents, money, or property coming into his hands professionally until he is paid for services extends to any general balance due to the attorney for professional services, either in the particular matter in connection with which he came into possession of the things retained or in any other matter.—In re McCormick's Estate, 132 A. 485, 14 N J Misc 73

Personal injury and wrongful death actions

An attorney, retained by decedent to prosecute a personal injury action and substituted under a stipulation reserving the right to share in the proceeds of the action, had no lien on the proceeds of an action brought by administratrix of decedent for his wrongful death arising from the same injury, since the action for wrongful death was independent of the personal injury action—In re Madison's Estate, 270 N Y S. 621, 151 Misc 85

Ejectment and action to foreclose mortgage

Restriction to services in collecting money

A statutory lien to which an attorney would have been entitled for services in collecting money from another attorney would give him a lien on an order in such a proceeding, but not for his services generally—In re Sebring, 264 N Y S. 379, 238 App Div. 281.

Services in condemnation proceedings

The only attorney's fees which the court could consider in the matter of an attorney's petition for a lien on money deposited in court after the abandonment of condemnation proceedings by a railway against the clients of such attorney, were those for which the railway company could be compelled to indemnify respondents under the provisions of the Eminent Domain Act, and, therefore, an allowance for services performed on the question of establishing a "way of necessity" and other matters was improper.—Chicago Junction Ry Co. v. the services are performed in the type of proceeding contemplated by such statute, the charging lien of an attorney may be broad enough to cover his services in all proceedings leading to a judgment or decree.[27] Moreover, irrespective of statute, a charging lien may extend to fees in suits arising from, and incidental to, the main cause,[28] and it is not essential, that all the services for which a lien is claimed shall have been rendered before the same court.[29] Nevertheless, a lien properly allowable, by statute, for services rendered in proceedings subsequent to the main proceedings, in which a judgment was recovered, may not be extended so as to cover services rendered in the main proceedings.[30]

At all events, a mere general debt due to an attorney cannot be protected by a charging lien.[31] Accordingly, a charging lien cannot cover a general balance due for professional services rendered in other cases,[32] unless authorized by an applicable

(7) An attorney, who participated in conferences and arguments before government department heads, and secured adjustment of corporation's tax liabilities, was held to be entitled to a charging lien, under Judiciary L. § 475, although no legal or judicial action or proceeding was instituted, and although he did not obtain actual possession or custody of any fund recovered.—Cunningham v. Sizer Steel Corporation, (D.C.N.Y.) 1 F.(2d) 653

(8) An attorney for a committee of certificate holders was not entitled to a "charging lien" on bond certificates in possession of receivers, for services rendered in obtaining "through diplomatic channels" a promise by officials of a foreign government to pay the balances due on bond certificates.—Irish Free State v. Actions in surrogate's court

(1) Under Judiciary L. § 475, giving attorneys' liens on the recovery, etc., the surrogate's court is in the same position as any other tribunal as regards the limitation of an attorney's lien to one action.—In re Eno's Estate, 182 N.Y.S. 571, 112 Misc. 45.

(2) Accordingly, where an attorney first contested the probate of one will, and after denial sought probate of another will under which his clients took greater interests, the statutory lien given by Judiciary L. § 475, on the recovery, etc., cannot be spread over the two actions, and any lien for the services in the contest is separate from that for services in securing the probate of the other will.—In re Eno's Estate, supra

(3) Moreover, the contention that two proceedings for the probate of different wills are to be considered as a single employment for the accomplishment of the ultimate result of securing legacies of clients under the first executed will and that contest proceedings against the second will should be regarded merely as a "preliminary step" for the purpose of putting the clients in a position to proceed with the probate of the first will is unavailable to the attorney who seeks to impress a lien for services in both probate proceedings.—In re Eno's Estate, supra statute,[33] or by agreement.[34] Moreover, the mere fact that a number of separate suits involve the same questions and are argued and determined together does not subject the fruits of one to a lien for services rendered in the others.[35]

Services rendered for affirmative purpose. The charging lien of an attorney may be restricted to services which he performs on behalf of a client who asserts affirmatively a cause of action, claim, or counterclaim, as distinguished from services rendered for a negative purpose, such as to defeat a cause of action, or claim, set up by a client's adversary.[36] In pursuance of this rule, it is held that where no affirmative relief is claimed no lien exists, except as to a judgment for costs.[37] At any rate, in order to give rise to a lien for an attorney's services on behalf of a client who has filed a counterclaim, it may be necessary that the action result in an affirmative judgment for defendant.[38]

Amount of lien generally; capacity in which services are performed. As regards the amount of a charging lien, it is held that such lien is to be measured by the value of the attorney's services.[39] Therefore, where the terms of a contract between an attorney and his client fix the value

Contest of will

Under Judiciary L. § 475, giving an attorney a lien on his client's cause of action, claim, or counterclaim, which attaches to a verdict, report, decision, judgment, or final order, an attorney who successfully contested the probate of one will, and thereby paved the way for his clients to secure a large share of the estate, has no lien because of such proceeding, for the judgment denying the will probate was not a recovery in favor of the contestants, and a setting aside of the same, even, would not allow the attorney to collect for his services—In re Eno's Estate, 182 N Y S 571, 112 Misc 45.

Protection of existing right or title

An attorney's statutory lien extends only to a client's affirmative cause of action, and cannot be extended to services which merely protect the existing right or title of the client's property—Bruce v. Calloway, (Okl) 46 P (2d) 446

Counterclaim in divorce action

The Attorneys' Lien Act does not include services rendered under counterclaim filed on behalf of husband defendant in a divorce action seeking return of property in possession of complainant wife—McCarthy v McCarthy, 174 A. 751, 117 N J Eq 22.

Defeating claim or recovery by client's adversary

(1) An attorney merely defeating recovery against his client as defendant is not entitled to a lien on property involved in litigation for fees—Wessinger v Sturkie, (C.C A S.C.) 77 F (2d) 751.

(2) An attorney retained to defend a petition filed in the probate court against the executor of an estate to compel him to inventory a deposit in a bank as assets of the estate has, on securing a dismissal of the petition on the ground that the deposit was a survivorship account, and, therefore, not a part of the estate, no lien on the deposit for his services, such services not being on any "claims, demands and causes of action" for suit or collection, and the defeat of the petition not being a recovery of any "property or money" within the meaning of the attorney's lien statute—Grossberg v. Knight, 266 Ill.App 183

Canceling conveyance and recovery of land

While, under Acts (1909) p 893, an attorney has no lien for services in merely defending a suit, services rendered in canceling a conveyance for fraud and recovering the land are such services as to entitle the attorney to a lien—Baxter County Bank v Davis, 208 S W. 797, 137 Ark. 459.

Where an attorney was employed to defend a suit, and his client had him file therein a counterclaim, which was sustained, the attorney had a lien on the judgment, under St § 107—Hatfield v. Richmond, 197 S W. 654, 177 Ky. 183

Services in producing money or property

The amount of an attorney's charging lien is limited to the price or value of the services rendered in a particular action or proceeding to produce the money or personal property which has been recovered by the client—Johnson v. Riddle & Ellis, 85 So. 701, 204 Ala. 408

Time at which value of services considered

(1) In determining the amount secured by an attorney's charging lien, the court may determine the value of services before, at the time of, and after commencement of an action on which the lien is based—Application of H. C. Roberts Electric Supply Co., 226 N.Y.S. 211, 131 Misc. 119.

(2) Time when lien attaches generally see infra § 216.

Limitation to claims placed in attorney's hand

An attorney's statutory lien may be limited to claims placed in the attorney's hand for suit or collec-of the attorney's services, his lien may be measured by such contract.[40] In the absence of such agreement, the reasonable value of the services rendered is to be considered in determining the amount of an attorney's charging lien.[41] At all events, the lien extends only so far as to embrace an amount actually due, or in good faith believed to be due,[42] and is limited to compensation for professional services.[43] Moreover, the lien of an attorney entitles him to recover for his own personal services only, and not for the services of another employed by him to assist,[44] unless the client con-tion—Rice v. Kelly, 10 S.W.(2d) 1112, 226 Ky 347.

Deduction

The amount collected by the executor on a mortgage bequeathed to decedent's widow, for which amount the executor had not accounted, must be deducted from an additional amount received by the widow from the estate in determining the right of the widow's attorney to a lien under a retainer contract giving him a contingent fee on the widow's additional recovery due to renouncing the will—Race v Harris, 236 N Y S. 169, 246 App Div 367.

Percentage

(1) An attorney has a statutory lien on his client's cause of action for the percentage of the amount recovered to which he is entitled under his contract with client—Vaughan v. Hill, 242 S.W. 826, 154 Ark 528.

(2) The lien of an attorney agreeing to prosecute his client's cause of action for a sum equal to one third of all sums which may be recovered attaches only to the amount actually recovered.—Devine v Pyanhunkah, 39 P (2d) 132, 170 Okl. 178

(3) Under Acts (1909) p 892, an attorney has a lien for that percentage of the proceeds of judgment or settlement which his contract with his client entitled him to receive.—St Louis, I. M & So Ry. Co. v. Hays & Ward, 195 S W 28, 128 Ark 471.

(4) An attorney's contract with a surety on a road contractor's bond to bring suit against a surety on a subcontractor's bond in consideration of twenty per cent of the amount found due to the contractor's surety and performance of contract fixed an equitable charge in the attorney's favor on cause of action—U S Fidelity & Guaranty Co v Levy, (C C A Ala.) 77 F (2d) 972

(5) Agreement entitling an attorney to ten per cent for reduction of note to judgment, including ten per cent attorney's fees provided for note, did not entitle the attorney to a lien for ten per cent of the amount of the judgment, where the judgment was declared a special lien on land securing payment of note and land was sold to the payee of the note on execution for less than amount of the judgment, but entitled the attorney to a lien for ten per cent of the proceeds of the sale—Stegall v. Edwards, (Ga App) 181 S E. 502

Requiring all interested persons to be bound

An advance agreement is ineffective to fix the extent of a lien of an attorney on a fund to be recovered, unless all persons interested in the fund are privy to the contract or bound by principles of agency or estoppel—In re Dugan's Estate, 264 N Y S 683, 147 Misc. 776.

Procuring exemptions for widow

Where an attorney was retained to represent and protect the interests of a widow in the estate of her deceased husband, it was held that the attorney's services in obtaining the widow's exemption as to certain property were within a contract whereby the attorney was to receive half of the additional amount obtained from the estate by the widow's renouncing will, and a payment to the attorney for his services in procuring such exemptions must be deducted in determining his right to an attorney's lien—Race v Harris, 236 N Y.S. 168, 246 App Div. 367.

Services rather than contract as basis

Where an agreement between a client and his attorney provides that he shall have a certain share of the recovery, a charging lien is allowed only for services rendered and not for a share of the recovery stipulated for in the contract of retainer.—Kauffman v Phillip, 134 N.W. 575, 154 Iowa 542—Gibson v. Taking title to facilitate handling

The mere fact that one acting as president of a corporation happened to be an attorney did not entitle him to a lien for services in taking title to a certain lease in the name of himself and another for the purpose of advantageously handling the transaction—Elliott v. Nowata Oil & Refining Co, (C C A Okl) 37 F. (2d) 76, modifying (D C) Nowata Oil & Refining Co. v. Elliott, 32 F. (2d) 349

Caring for property

In a client's suit for accounting against an attorney who filed counterclaim for services and disbursements, the attorney was held not entitled to a lien for certain services, including those for caring for certain mortgaged property involved in litigation wherein such care was exercised.—Davitt v O'Connor, (C C A N Y) 73 F (2d) 43, certiorari denied O'Connor v. Davitt, 55 S Ct. 217. 293 U S. 621, 79 L Ed 709.

Services in connection with condemnation

Attorneys for a bankrupt, who rendered services in connection with the condemnation by the United States of property, title to which stood in the bankrupt's name, both before and after bankruptcy, and whose services resulted in the obtaining of a sum considerably greater than that which the government originally offered to pay, were not entitled to collect for their services and disbursements on the theory of analogy to the case where one of several persons interested in trust property or a fund brings a suit for its preservation or administration, in which case the court will order him to be reimbursed—Turner v. Woodard, (Mass.) 259 F. 737, 170 C.C.A 537.

sents or agrees to be responsible for the fees of assistants[45] Also, an attorney is not entitled to a lien on a judgment where the procuring cause is the employment of other attorneys;[46] but, for actual services rendered while the employment continued, the attorney has a lien, even though the recovery is secured as the result of another action brought by other attorneys[47] and in a different court[48] Further, an attorney who brings suit on behalf of one under disability may have a lien for services rendered in such suit.[49]

Whether limited to fees taxable as costs. Where the practice of taxing attorneys' fees as costs has been abolished, the charging lien has been extended, under appropriate statutory provisions or by judicial decision, to cover the fees due to an attorney by contract or under a quantum meruit.[50] Of course, when the law prohibits an attorney from contracting for or recovering on a quantum meruit more than the attorney's fees taxed in the costs, the attorney's lien may not exceed the attorney's fee so taxed.[51]

Particular items of expense, claim, or disbursement Subject to rules previously discussed in this section, an attorney is entitled to a lien for any legitimate expense incurred by him in the prosecution of an action,[52] and this is not necessarily limited to taxable items of costs and disbursements, but may include any expenditure which may properly be made in furtherance of the prosecution of an action,[53] and may include claims which have been actually paid by him.[54] However, an attorney's charging lien may not embrace a claim for unpaid salary.[55]

Requirements for the perfection of attorneys' liens must be met in order that such liens shall be available.

Statutes prescribing the manner in which attorneys' liens shall be perfected must be complied with in every particular.[56] Moreover, it has been held, without reference to statute, that an attorney who claims a lien must demand recognition thereof in order that such lien may be made available to him[57]

§ 215. —— Notice

f. Vacating pending adjudication of right to lien

a. Necessity

While no notice is required to render a retaining lien complete and effective, notice may be necessary to the perfection of a charging lien. However, it has been held that notice to the assignee of the judgment or to the creditors of the client is not necessary.

A retaining lien is complete and effective without notice to anyone.[58] Moreover, under particular statutes an attorney may not be required to give notice of a charging lien in order that it may be effective.[59] As a general rule, however, a charging lien is not perfected until notice has been given to the person against whom such lien is asserted,[60] unless such person has actual knowledge of the claim,[61] or has notice of facts sufficient to put a prudent person on inquiry.[62] There exists, however, authority to the effect that no express notice need be given, in a case where a suit is pending, to render such a lien effective, the pendency of the suit being regarded as sufficient notice.[63]

Where no lien expressly given by statute

Notice of the lien is necessary where no lien is expressly given by statute—Lablache v. Kirkpatrick, 8 N.Y.Civ.Proc. 256

No lien prior to service of summons

Under Acts (1899) c. 243 §§ 1, 2, and in view of Shannon Code §§ 4445, 4518, plaintiff's counsel is held not to have a lien on the cause of action until service of summons, where defendant was not in some way notified of the institution of the action—Memphis Steel Const. Co. v. Walker, 185 S.W. 715, 135 Tenn. 55.

Notice of attachment

Under St. § 2358 a, requiring filing of notice of attachment or execution to affect subsequent purchasers, an attorney for plaintiff wife in a divorce action, in which defendant's land was attached to preserve, as against subsequent bona fide purchasers, his attorney's lien, accruing under § 107, on the land, was required to file notice of the attachment—Daugherty v. Pond Creek Coal Co., 188 S.W. 624, 171 Ky. 604.

Depending on kind and time of agreement

Under Rev.St.(1909) §§ 964, 965, as to an attorney's lien for compensation, the adverse party is required to take notice of an agreement of plaintiff and his attorney for fees made when the action was brought; but to be chargeable with notice of the agreement after judgment increasing compensation he must be given actual notice.—Miller v. been held that, if the judgment is only for costs, the record is, of itself, notice to the judgment debtor of the attorney's lien thereon;[64] but this rule is not supported in some jurisdictions.[65]

Where there is a settlement. Notice to the adversary of a client may not be required where a settlement is made after commencement of suit.[66] Further, it is not necessary to show notice, where it appears that the settlement between the parties was a collusive one, made with the deliberate design of defeating the attorney's claim.[67]

As between attorney and assignees of judgment. To make the lien of an attorney for his fees on a judgment in favor of his client perfect against an assignee of his client no notice of the existence of such lien need be given to the assignee.[68]

As between attorney and creditors of client It has been held that an attorney's lien on a judgment will prevail over an attachment by trustee process without notice to the attaching creditor, it being presumed that the attaching creditor has knowledge of such lien.[69]

Where pendency of suit regarded as notice. Where it has been decided that the pendency of a suit is itself notice to a creditor of the existence of an attorney's lien pending the suit, it is held that, in order to preserve the lien thereafter, the notice must be extended by stating the existence of the lien in the judgment or decree.[70]

b. By Whom and to Whom Given

Notice of liens when required may be given by a third person, and should be given personally to the person entitled to notice or to his agent

It is usual for notice of an attorney's lien to be given personally by the attorney claiming the lien, or by some one acting at his request; it has been held that proof that notice had been given gratuitously by a third person was sufficient to bind the judgment debtor.[71] When notice of an attorney's lien is required, such notice should be given to the adverse party personally, or to some authorized agent.[72]

c. Requisites and Sufficiency

While the form of notice of an attorney's lien should be in conformity with applicable statutes, it is ordinarily sufficient when the form is such as will protect the judgment creditor

Notice of an attorney's lien should be given in Writing insufficient

Where the summons in an action on notes providing for attorneys' fees in case of suit had indorsed thereon certain amounts with interest, and the name of an attorney below the clerk's signature, it was held that the indorsement was not a sufficient notice of an attorney's lien, under Gen St (1915) § 484—Ahalt v. Gatewood, 198 P. 970, 109 Kan 328.

Service of written notice insufficient

(1) Attorneys having a lien for their services on a judgment may make such lien effective by giving written notice to the adverse party of the lien claim—Cherry v. Erwin & Erwin, (Okl) 49 P (2d) 788

(2) Under Gen St (1915) § 484, amending Gen St (1901) § 395, the service of a written notice of an attorney's lien on attorneys of record for the adverse party is sufficient—Alexander v Clarkson, 164 P. 294, 100 Kan 294, L R A 1917F 1006.

(3) Where attorneys handed a copy of a written compensation contract to defendant, there was a sufficient compliance with Rev St.(1909) § 965, requiring written notice of an attorney's interest in his client's cause of action—Simpson v. Federal Lead Co, (Mo App) 187 S W. 1123

Objection unavailable to client

Where, on the dismissal of condemnation proceedings, an order was entered allowing costs and attorney's fees to respondents, and part of the amount allowed was paid respondents and the remainder deposited with the clerk, and subsequently a petition for an attorney's lien was filed by one of the attorneys for respondents, and thereafter, without objection by respondents, such order was amended so as to provide that said deposit with the clerk should abide the event of any order made on the petition for a lien, respondents were precluded from raising the objection, on appeal, of a lack of the written notice required by Hurd Rev St.(1917) c 82 § 55 (Jones & A St.Annot [1918] par 611), creating attorney's liens—Chicago Junction Ry. Co. v. Leitch, 215 Ill App. 67.

ing is expressly required or necessarily implied by the terms of the statute.[82]

Filing, indorsement, or entry of record. Under applicable statutes one claiming an attorney's lien on a judgment may proceed to perfect or establish such lien by placing the lien on record, as by entering it on the docket,[83] or by the indorsement of the lien claim on the pleadings,[84] or by filing it with the clerk,[85] or by registration of the lien in a place required by statute.[86] These statutes must be strictly complied with,[87] although there need not be compliance with inapplicable provisions of a statute requiring recording and notice of an attorney's claim in specified cases other than those in which a lien is claimed.[88] Of course, where there is no statute providing for notice by filing with the clerk, such filing is ineffectual,[89] unless the party affected has actual notice of it.[90] At any rate, as against the client, filing of a notice with a clerk of court may not be required as a prerequisite to the effectiveness of an attorney's lien.[91]

d. Service

While constructive service of notice has been held to be sufficient, it has been held that, where a statutory provision for notice is silent as to the mode of service, the service must be personal.

O'Neal, (La.App.) 160 So. 463

Effect of garnishment and absence of recorded contract

An attorney who, under a contract, was entitled to fifty per cent of the amount to be recovered by intervener in the suit, was held to be entitled to a prior lien on an amount which was decreed to belong to intervener, notwithstanding the attorney did not sign a written contract or record it with the clerk of court, or serve copy on the opposing party, and notwithstanding the third party obtained judgment against intervener and garnisheed such amount—Davis Finance & Securities Co. v. O'Neal, (La.App.) 160 So. 463.

Recording of conveyance sufficient

Recording of a conveyance to an attorney of an interest in mineral rights, in consideration of his services to be rendered in protecting those rights, protects the interest of the attorney against a subsequent conveyance to the adverse party without his giving notice to the adverse party under Act (1906) No. 124, relating to perfecting lien of attorneys, since the conveyance to the attorney was a present one, operative under registry laws regardless of the lien statute—McClung v. Prior to enforcement of lien

As between an attorney and a client, nothing need be done by the attorney prior to enforcement of his lien against fruits of a judgment in his client's favor, and it is not necessary for the attorney to file any formal notice with the clerk of the court where the action was pending—Clark v. O'Donnell, 187 P. 534, 68 Colo. 279.

constructive notice of an attorney's lien is sufficient,[92] where a statute directing notice of an attorney's lien to be given is silent as to the manner of giving it, personal service is necessary, and service by mail is insufficient[93]

Signing contract of employment as condition precedent to service of notice. Signing of the attorney's contract of employment is not necessarily a condition precedent to a valid service of notice of an attorney's lien[94]

Time to give notice. Although an attorney for plaintiff cannot enforce a lien against a judgment debtor who has in good faith satisfied a judgment before notice of such attorney's lien,[95] notice of an attorney's lien claim may be in time when given before judgment.[96] While it has been held that notice prior to settlement is necessary in order to perfect an attorney's lien,[97] there exists authority to the effect that the proceeds of litigation may be bound by such lien, notwithstanding notice thereof has not been given prior to a settlement or a judgment confirming the same.[98]

e. Operation and Effect

Notice of attorney's charging lien may obviate the necessity of establishing the lien by action. It also has been said to bear some analogy to an assignment of an interest in the judgment or proceeds realized.

Notice of an attorney's lien may dispense with the necessity of bringing an action to establish such lien[99]

Fraudulent or erroneous notice. If the notice is fraudulent, no rights can be based on it in a court of equity.[1] That notice of an attorney's lien states that claimant is entitled to a greater proportion of a sum recovered than is actually due him, does not affect the validity of such lien for the amount which actually is due.[2]

Registered mail plus petition
Giving of notice to defendant of complainants' attorney's lien for fees by registered mail on the day of entry of the decree confirming the parties' settlement of the litigation and again about two months later and the filing of a petition to establish such lien were sufficient notice to all parties, although the original notice was not received until a day after such decree was entered—Catherwood v Morris, 196 N E 519, 360 Ill 473 See Limbach v. Analogy to assignment. A charging lien does not usually attach until the recovery of judgment,[5] and there exists authority to the effect that an attorney's general lien does not attach until the proceeds of the action on which the claim is based are collected and in the hands of the attorney.[6] A charging lien may, however, attach prior to the recovery of judgment by reason of applicable statutes[7] or by agree-

The lien of an attorney has been held to attach from the time of the filing of his lien—Jacobsen v. Miller, 198 N.W. 349, 50 N.D. 828, 34 A L R. 317.

Commencement of action or filing of pleading

(1) Under statutes providing that attorneys shall have charging liens on the causes of action or counterclaims of their clients, a charging lien may attach from the commencement of the action or from the filing of an answer containing a counterclaim, depending on whether the attorney claiming such lien acts on behalf of plaintiff, petitioner, or complainant on the one hand or defendant or respondent on the other—Devine v. Pyanhunkah, 39 P.(2d) 132, 170 Okl 178—6 C.J p 779 notes 31, 32.

(2) Accordingly, it has been held that the statutory lien of the attorney for the party who sues exists from the institution of the suit or proceeding—Midland Valley R. Co. v Johnson, 215 S W. 665, 140 Ark. 174, 7 A L R 1007—Steuart v D'Esterre, 170 N.Y S 936, affirmed Steuart v D'Esterre, 174 N Y S 922, 187 App Div. 935—Smith v. First Nat. Bank, 170 N Y S. 127, 103 Misc 274, modified on other grounds 173 N Y S. 595, 184 App Div. 719—Mack v. Hugger Bros Const. Co., 10 Tenn.App. 102—6 C J p 775 note 68.

(3) Hence, under Comp L.(1907) § 135, as to attorney's lien, an attorney has a lien on a cause of action, not from the time when employed, but "from the commencement of an action."—Broadbent v. Denver & R G. Ry. Co, 160 P. 1185, 48 Utah 598.

(4) Moreover, it has been held that the lien of an attorney, on a suit given by Code (1907) § 3011, attaches on the filing of the client's complaint, although service of the summons has not been perfected such filing being, under §§ 3092, 4853, commencement of the suit—Alabama Fuel & Iron Co. v. Denson, 94 So. 311, 208 Ala. 337.

(5) Similarly, the lien of an attorney at law on his client's cause of action attaches, under Crawford & M Dig § 628, when complaint is filed and summons issued, "commencement of action" in such section being used in the sense defined by § 1049, which applies without exception to all civil cases—Union Sawmill Co v. Pace, Campbell & Davis, 260 S W. 428, 163 Ark. 598.

(6) Further, under Rev Codes § 6422, declaring that an attorney's lien attaches in favor of counsel for plaintiff from the commencement of the action, an attorney can assert his lien, prior to judgment or settlement, independently of his client.—Walsh v. Hoskins, 162 P. 960, 53 Mont. 198.

(7) Where an attorney instituting a suit to enforce a client's right has ment[8] Under other statutes an attorney's lien on a judgment is not effective until the judgment has been perfected by entry in the judgment docket.[9] At any rate, where a statute confers a lien on claims and demands, the lien exists during the preliminary stages and before suit or action is brought[10]

A contingent judgment will not be subject to the lien until the contingency is satisfied[11]

§ 217. Duration and Termination of Lien in General

A retaining lien exists as long as the attorney retains possession of the subject matter Otherwise an attorney's lien for compensation generally exists until satisfied or released

Where possession of the res impressed with an attorney's lien is essential to the existence thereof (supra § 210), such lien may continue to exist so long as the attorney retains possession of such res[12] Otherwise an attorney's lien for compensation generally continues to exist until satisfied or released[13] The lien likewise survives where the judgment becomes dormant and is subsequently revived by other attorneys.[14]

Appeal. Although there exists authority to the effect that an attorney's lien is not superseded by an appeal,[15] and this particularly where the appeal does not operate to vacate the judgment,[16] there exists other authority to the effect that an appeal from a judgment suspends the lien.[17] Similarly it has been held that an attorney's lien which arises in the original action may survive the reversal of judgment under some circumstances,[18] while there

a lien on a cause of action from the commencement of the action, he is not restricted to the cause of action in so far only as it may be enforced in a court, but the lien exists even when the cause of action is prosecuted by private negotiation —Universal Oil Products Co v Standard Oil Co. of Indiana, (D C Mo) 6 F Supp 37, affirmed (C C A) German v Universal Oil Products Co, 77 F (2d) 70

(8) Gen.St (1913) § 4955 subd 3, providing that an attorney shall have a lien for his compensation on the cause of action from the time of the service of the summons therein, applies to an action in tort as well as to an action on the contract —Kubu v Kabes, 172 N W 496, 142 Minn 433

(9) Attorneys have liens for services on property recovered which are not perfect on the property until after recovery, but are perfect at once on suit —Byrd v Clark, 153 S E 737, 170 Ga 669, rehearing denied 154 S E 881, 170 Ga 912

(10) Attorney's statutory lien arises on his employment and is perfected by ultimate recovery of judgment for his client —Molloy v. Hubbard, 173 S E 877, 48 Ga App 820 Validity of statute giving lien from time summons is served see supra § 208

Contract held to create present lien

A contract of an attorney and a client for a contingent fee imposed on the recovery of certain money or things creates, by implication, a present lien on the existing res for the security of the attorney —Lewis v Braun, 191 N.E 56, 356 Ill. 467

Prior to recovery against corporation

A contract of an attorney to secure transfer of stock certificates to his client and to collect dividends declared on the stock for contingent fee created an equitable lien of the attorney on the stock certificates before recovery against corporation — Lewis v. Braun, 191 N.E 56, 356 Ill 467.

also exists authority to the effect that a reversal of the judgment annuls the lien.[19]

Death or disability of attorney or client. An attorney's lien, being a contractual right, ordinarily survives the death or disability of the client[20] or of the attorney,[21] provided it attached previous to such death or disability.[22] However, the lien of an attorney for services in a suit for personal injuries does not survive the death of the injured person so as to be impressed on the proceeds of an action brought to recover for such death.[23]

Merger of lien into judgment. The lien of an attorney on a fund produced by his services may be terminated by the merger of such lien in a judgment rendered for the attorney claiming the lien.[24]

Appointment of receiver. The appointment of a receiver to take charge of the assets of a client does not terminate his attorney's lien for services.[25]

Termination of client's interest in subject matter Inasmuch as an attorney's retaining lien cannot extend beyond the interest of the client in the subject matter (§ 210), when the interest of the client terminates, of necessity the lien of the attorney terminates.[26]

Termination of supporting contract. Under particular statutory provisions it has been held that an attorney's lien may terminate with the contract on which such lien is based.[27]

§ 218. Waiver, Loss, or Discharge in General

An attorney's lien may be waived or lost, as under circumstances set forth hereunder.

If an attorney agrees to a waiver, either expressly or by some act inconsistent with the existence of the lien, his lien is lost.[28] Accordingly the lien may be lost by failure to assert it in the prop-

Judgment for same amount on partial new trial

trol, of the attorney.[33] Further, an attorney's lien is not lost by reason of the fraudulent act of one other than the attorney.[34] Nor is such lien lost where the action, in which the attorney's services have been rendered, is dismissed at the request of his client and another action is brought by other attorneys in another court.[35] Further the purchase of a judgment procured by an attorney cannot be made the instrument of depriving such attorney of a lien to which he is rightfully entitled.[36] An attorney's lien may, however, be discharged after payment of the amount of such lien into court.[37]

As affected by statute of limitations. The lien on the judgment is destroyed when an attorney's claim for services is barred by the statute of limitations.[38] The statute does not, however, run against an attorney's bill for fees until the dissolution of the relation between him and his client.[39]

§ 219. Discharge of Attorney

The lien of an attorney is not lost by his discharge.

A client cannot, by discharging an attorney, deprive him of his lien, unless the discharge is for good cause.[40]

§ 220. Withdrawal by Attorney

Although the voluntary withdrawal of an attorney does not destroy his retaining lien, whether a charging lien is lost may depend on whether the withdrawal was for good cause.

justified in refusing to continue in a case, he does not forfeit his lien for services already rendered.[43]

§ 221. Satisfaction and Release of Judgment

Satisfaction and release of judgment may under circumstances referred to hereunder operate to discharge an attorney's lien

An attorney waives his lien by releasing the lien of the judgment on which it exists,[44] or by procuring satisfaction of such judgment.[45] So, where he consents to the payment of the judgment to his client, he thereby waives his lien,[46] but the lien of an attorney cannot be discharged by a release of the judgment by the client.[47] Moreover, under appropriate statutory provisions the lien of an attorney may survive satisfaction of his client's judgment.[48] Although there exists authority to the effect that payment of a judgment to one of several attorneys jointly employed operates to extinguish their lien for services,[49] there also exists authority to the effect that the payment of a judgment to a co-attorney will not operate to defeat the lien of the principal attorney thereon,[50] unless such co-attorney was his agent to receive payment.[51]

§ 222. Taking Security

The lien of an attorney may be lost by his taking of security under circumstances referred to hereunder.

The right to pursue and claim the benefit of the lien may be waived by taking, or agreeing to take, other security,[52] or by accepting payment under security previously given.[53] The acceptance by an attorney of his client's note in payment of his fee may not, however, constitute a waiver of the attorney's statutory lien,[54] unless it appears that the note was accepted in discharge of the obligation.[55] Moreover a mortgage given to an attorney as additional security for fees may not estop him from asserting his lien.[56] Further, that an attorney takes an assignment of stock may not operate to deprive him of his lien for services in connection with such stock.[57]

Attorney taking assignment of any person interested may release an attorney's lien by executing a bond in a sum double the amount claimed, payable to the attorney, with security to be approved by the clerk.[58] The giving of such a bond releases the lien, and the court may not properly deny or limit its effect to that end.[59]

§ 223. Suit for Compensation

By suing a client on a claim for services and recovery of judgment an attorney waives his lien as to the client although the lien may thereafter be enforced against the adverse party.

As a rule an attorney waives his lien by suing his client on his claim for services, and recovering judgment.[60] But it has been held that, after judgment against a client, an attorney may still enforce his lien as against the adverse party.[61]

Suit on other claims. An attorney's lien is not lost by suing a client on other claims.[62]

§ 224. Relinquishment of Possession

An attorney who voluntarily relinquishes possession of the subject matter of a retaining lien loses the same, although such lien may not be lost when possession is delivered for a special purpose.

As a possessory or retaining lien depends upon possession, it will be lost if possession is voluntarily relinquished.[63] Thus by turning over to his client the full sum collected an attorney waives his lien thereon,[64] although he retains the debt secured by that lien.[65] So where an attorney pays over a balance, over and above the amount claimed for fees, his lien attaches only to the amount retained.[66] But where the delivery is to the client for a temporary or special purpose,[67] or to a receiver of the client under order of court,[68] the lien is preserved.

§ 225. Subject Matter of Retaining Lien

Papers, securities, or other property delivered to an attorney by a client in the course of the attorney's professional employment may constitute the subject matter of a retaining lien.

Ordinarily papers, securities, or other property delivered to an attorney by his client in the course of, and with reference to, such attorney's professional employment may constitute the subject matter of a retaining lien.[69] More specifically the retaining lien includes ordinary legal documents of

Where plaintiff recovered for his client seven hundred thousand shares of stock, which was represented by a certificate placed in the registry of the court and delivered to the attorney, on payment by his client, and others who became interested with him in the stock, of a certain sum of money, he did not lose his lien on his client's interest in the certificate of stock by parting with possession thereof and sending it to a trustee, who was to hold it for the benefit of his client and the other interested persons, where he notified such trustee, at the time of parting with possession of the certificate of stock, of his claim of lien on his client's interest for services rendered in recovering the stock.—Clark v O'Donnell, 187 P. 534, 68 Colo 279.

Stock certificate

Where an attorney was employed to recover shares of capital stock of a corporation under a contract giving the client an option to purchase, and there was a decree for plaintiff, and a certificate was issued and lodged in the registry of the court, and stood in the name of the client, who, in order to obtain the stock, entered into an agreement with other persons in order to raise the necessary money, the client and the other persons to have each a certain interest in the stock, and on payment of the money the stock was turned over to the attorney for transmission and lodgment with a trust company, the attorney had a lien on his client's interest in the certificate while in his hands—Clark v O'Donnell, 187 P. 534, 68 Colo 279

Title papers

On substitution or discharge of attorney

(1) Upon substitution of attorneys, former attorneys were entitled to a general lien on any papers in their possession as security for payment of fee—Klein v. Acco Products, (D C N Y.) 13 F.Supp 894.

(2) Similarly an attorney who is discharged during the pendency of litigation has a retaining lien for his services on papers pertaining to such action—In re Weitling, 194 N E 401, 266 N Y 184, reversing 275 N Y S 973, 242 App Div 823

Necessity for actual possession

(1) Since the attorney's possession of something to which a retaining lien can attach is essential to the existence of such lien, as noted in § 210, it necessarily follows that the subject matter itself, in order to be such, must be in the actual possession of the attorney claiming such lien—Reynolds v Warner, 258 N.W 462, 128 Neb 304, 97 A L R 1128—In re Sebring, 264 N Y S 379, 238 App Div 281—In re Farmers Loan & Trust Co, 188 N.Y S 373, 196 App Div 639—Zinsser v. Zinsser, 82 Pa Super 461

(2) Accordingly an attorney has no general lien, for services rendered an executor, on estate's assets which were not in the attorney's possession—In re Cutting's Estate, 169 N Y S 205

(3) On the other hand money cannot become the subject matter of a retaining lien until such money is actually collected and paid to the attorney—Anderson v Brackeleer, 55 N Y S 721, 28 N Y Civ Proc 306

(4) Therefore a retaining lien does not extend to a judgment until the money is paid to the attorney—Anderson v Brackeleer, supra

Necessity for acquiring possession in course of professional employment

(1) In order that papers, securities, or other property delivered to an attorney may constitute the subject matter of a retaining lien it is essential that the particular subject matter come into the possession of the attorney in the course of his professional employment—Underhill v. Jacob Doll & Sons, (C C A N Y.) 69 F (2d) 519—City of Memphis v Byrne, 9 Tenn App 379—6 C J. p 770 note 11, p 785 note 93.

(2) At common law an attorney had a retaining lien on moneys belonging to his client which came into his possession in the course of his professional employment—In re Dawson's Estate, 180 N.Y S. 271, 110 Misc 472.

(3) Under New York law a general lien attaches to every species of property belonging to client and coming into attorney's possession in the course of employment—In re Pyrocolor Corporation, (D.C N Y) 46 F (2d) 554.

(4) Both at common law and under statute general or retaining lien of attorney includes all documents, property, or money for fees due in the general employ of client as well as documents, property, or money coming into the attorney's hands in a particular case in which he is representing the client—Roxana Petroleum Co of Oklahoma v. (1) Beneficiary's attorney, if possessed of retaining lien on policy of his possession for services, does not, by reason thereof, possess lien on proceeds of policy deposited in court by insurer pending determination of party entitled thereto, since retaining lien on policy is merely a passive right to hold the policy, and confers no right to fund represented thereby.—Modern Woodmen of America v. § 226. —— Property Delivered for Special Purpose

Property or funds delivered for a special purpose cannot become the subject matter of an attorney's retaining lien.

Property or funds delivered for a special purpose by a client to his attorney cannot constitute the subject matter of a retaining lien in favor of such attorney[87] For example an attorney has no lien on property placed in his hands for a special purpose under such circumstances that a trust arises which is inconsistent with, or adverse to, the claim of a lien.[88]

§ 227. —— Property Delivered in Representative Capacity

Property delivered to an attorney by a client who acts in a representative capacity may be the subject matter of a retaining lien.

An attorney may claim a lien on property belonging to an estate, placed in his hands by the representative of that estate in his representative capacity, for services rendered him in such capacity.[89]

§ 228. Subject Matter of Charging Lien

a. In general
b. With respect to particular causes of action or proceedings
c. With respect to particular interests or kinds of property

a. In General

Although the judgment recovered by an attorney's efforts is primarily the subject matter of a charging lien it is generally held that such lien extends also to the proceeds of the judgment.

The judgment, which has been procured by the efforts of an attorney while acting on behalf of his client, is, primarily, the subject matter of a charging lien in favor of such attorney.[90] However, under applicable statutes or by judicial decision it is quite generally held that a charging lien applies to both the judgment and the proceeds thereof, in whatsoever form they may assume, and in whosesoever hands they may come[91] Accordingly the effect of statutes providing that, an attor-

(2d) 533, 116 Cal App. 255.

(2) Attorney who, under agreement that he should receive one half of amount obtained, was retained by party entitled to one half of fund constituting an award by the court of claims for land appropriated, to effect distribution of such fund, was held entitled to an allowance of one half of the share of his client only, such allowance constituting a charge solely upon such share.—In re

Existence of tangible object held unnecessary

(1) The lien of plaintiff's attorney on his client's cause of action, given by the Attorney's Lien Act of 1914, exists although there was nothing tangible to which it could be attached—Ferraro v. City Hall Garage, 109 A. 358, 94 N J Law 209 fined to judgments rendered by courts of record. Accordingly, a lien may not attach to a judgment of a probate,[6] municipal,[7] or justice's court,[8] unless such court is a court of record.[9] Under a particular statute providing for attorney's liens it has been held that there is nothing to which a lien can attach where there is only an interlocutory judgment in the case.[10]

Money in hands of particular persons. Subject to rules stated previously in this section to the effect that a charging lien may under certain circumstances attach to the judgment recovered by an attorney and the proceeds in whatever form and in whosesoever hands they may be, such lien may not extend to money in the hands of a third person.[11] However, under appropriate statutory provisions an attorney's lien may attach to money due his client in the hands of his adversary,[12] and funds in the hands of executors or administrators have been held to constitute the subject matter of an attorney's charging lien.[13] A mortgagor's attorneys who had secured reversal of foreclosure decree in the supreme court were held entitled to a lien for their services upon the fund received by the mortgagee through sale of the mortgaged premises had prior to service of notice of appeal.[14] Further an attorney's charging lien has been held to follow and attach to, funds in the hands of a garnisher.[15] Notwithstanding it has been held that funds in the hands of a receiver may be the subject of an attorney's lien,[16] it has also been held that such funds do not constitute a proper subject of such liens within the language of a statute providing for a lien on money in the hands of an "adverse party."[17]

b. With Respect to Particular Causes of Action or Proceedings

Subject to certain exceptions noted hereunder it seems that causes of action or proceedings of any type may constitute the subject matter of charging liens.

Where the statute provides for an attorney's lien, without specifically confining it to causes of action arising ex contractu, it seems that the lien exists upon a cause of action arising ex delicto, and for unliquidated damages, as well as in other cases.[18] It has been held, however, by some decisions based upon the common-law doctrine of the nonassignability of causes of action for injuries to the person, and others upon the language of the particular statute under which the charging lien is claimed that an attorney's charging lien cannot attach to causes of action arising ex delicto.[19] More specifically it has been held that a judgment in favor of the prosecutrix in bastardy proceedings is subject to the lien of her attorneys for professional services in obtaining such judgment,[20] and a cause of action under the Federal Employers' Liability Act may be the subject of an attorneys' lien.[21] Moreover there is nothing in the nature of an action for malicious prosecution which prevents it from being the subject of an equitable assignment under an attorney's lien statute.[22] Further a charging lien may attach to actions for divorce.[23] However, under the theory that alimony directed to be paid for the support and maintenance of the wife and children may not be appropriated to the payment of debts and liabilities disconnected from necessary support and maintenance, there exists authority to the effect that sums awarded as alimony may not be appropriated by an attorney in payment for legal services or disbursements connected therewith.[24] In the absence of a specific provision prohibiting such lien, proceedings to procure workmen's compensation may constitute the subject matter of an attorney's lien,[25] but under statutes specifically providing that payments of compensation shall not be subject to any lien such payments cannot constitute the subject matter of an attorney's charging lien.[26]

General creditors of partner or firm

Where attorneys recovered for a partner his share of certain partnership funds, their right to be paid for their services out of such fund was prior to claims of general creditors of the partner recovering the judgment, and superior to the general creditors of the partnership, who sought to obtain the proceeds of the judgment as assets of the partnership—Cohen v. Goldberger, 141 N.E. 656, 109 Ohio St. 22.

Attorneys for contractors

(1) It has been held that the lien of an attorney for prosecuting a suit by the contractor against the owner is entitled to be satisfied prior to the liens of claimants who served stop notices on the owner—Brunetti v. Grandi, 104 A. 139, 89 N.J.Eq 116.

(2) Where an attorney employed by certain contractors explained to the holder of order from such contractors that the claim of the contractors against an improvement district was unliquidated, and that his fee must be paid before anything was paid on the order, and the holder of order filed it with him for payment when the claim was collected, and let him proceed with the adjustment of the claim, the relation between them was that of attorney and client, and the attorney's claim for services was entitled to priority—Coston v. Kealy, 265 S.W. 347, 165 Ark. 594.

Lien creditor, such as mortgagee, whose interest in fund realized solely through the efforts of the property owner's attorney, who agreed to look for compensation to such fund, is substantially identical with that of the owner, primarily entitled to collect the fund, must yield his claim to attorney's reasonable claim for compensation and payment of legal costs, though superior to the owner's claim on the property—Appeal of Harris, 186 A. 92, 323 Pa 124

Claims subsequently attaching. A lien for attorney's services relates back and takes effect from the time of the commencement of the services,[61] and is superior to claims of creditors subsequently attaching on the interest of the client in the property involved in the action.[62] Accordingly an attorney's lien may be superior to the rights of a subsequent judgment creditor[63] or of a subsequently employed attorney.[64] Moreover such lien may be superior to rights under leases executed by a client after the lien has attached.[65] On the other hand the lien of an attorney has been held to be subject to the rights of a garnishing creditor where the garnishee summons is served prior to notice of such lien.[66]

Rights of client. A client is entitled to the amount recovered by an attorney subject to a lien for his fees.[67]

Taking for value and without notice

(1) The rule stated in the text is

Marshaling assets. An attorney's lien for services should be satisfied out of property subject thereto in the inverse order of alienation, in case of conveyance by the client.[72]

Remedies. An attorney may prevent or set aside assignments made in fraud of his lien,[73] and may proceed against one who has accepted a pledge of certain paper to which the attorney's lien has attached.[74] Where award is made to defendant upon applicable even where the assignee takes for value and without notice—Guliano v. Whitenack, 30 N Y S 415, 9 Misc. 562, 24 N Y Civ Proc 5o, 1 N Y Ann Cas. 75

Particular liens superior to claims under subsequent assignments

(1) Counsel, retained by defendant, who, with his wife, assigned interest in residuary estate of grandfather, to defend action by assignee, was held to have a lien on fund remaining after the payment of the assignee's claim, despite a subsequent assignment to a trust company and an individual—Steuart v D'Esterre, 170 N Y S 936, affirmed Steuart v Ineal, 174 N Y S 922, 187 App Div 935

(2) Agreement to pay a stated sum out of any moneys received from a closed bank to an attorney in consideration of his services in the prosecution of a claim against a bank in respect of moneys on deposit was operative as an assignment pro tanto or lien from date thereof and superior to an assignment thereafter made—Bank of Aurora v. Aurora Co-op Fruit Growing & Marketing Ass'n, (Mo.App) 91 S. W (2d) 177.

(3) Claims of assignees of a condemnation award were subject to a prior contract claim of attorneys representing tenants in condemnation proceeding—Swartz, Inc, v. City of Utica, 228 N Y S 660, 223 App Div. 506, motion granted 170 N E. 148, 252 N Y. 573, and affirmed 173 N E. 864, 254 N.Y. 555.

(4) Rights of attorney asserting claim to fund allowed as attorneys' fees in abandoned condemnation suit and relying on instrument whereby defendants agreed to divide the fund with the attorney should be superior to the rights of lay assignee of judgment, even if the instrument constituted only an agreement for compensation and not assignment—City of Los Angeles v. (2) That a holder of attorney's lien suing for the destruction thereof did not assert such lien until the property on which such lien was claimed was in the hands of a pledgee did not estop such holder from asserting lien, the pledgee not having changed its position—Hansbrough v. § 231. Protection against Settlement between Parties

b Remedies of attorney

c. Proceedings

a. In General

An attorney's lien cannot interfere with the absolute right of a client to settle, however, a settlement by a client after an attorney's lien has attached will not be permitted to interfere with such lien.

In accordance with rules governing the right of attorneys to recover compensation under contingent fee contracts on settlement between the parties to an action (supra § 189) the lien of an attorney, whether on the cause of action or on the judgment, does not operate so as to interfere with the absolute right of the client to settle.[77] Moreover, in the absence of a legislative enactment regulating the matter, the rule is quite general that prior to

Stipulation to dismiss

That attorney has lien for fees does not preclude parties from stipulating to dismiss suit—Miller v Miller, 163 N E 343, 332 Ill 177.

No compromise in particular case

Where an attorney was employed by a husband to institute and prosecute an action for the cancellation of wife's conveyance, but instructed not to file such action until authorized, and thereafter the husband and wife made a new deed, and the balance of the price due for such conveyance was paid, it was held that there was no compromise entitling attorney to a lien, under Comp St.(1921) § 4102—Evans v. Irby, 227 P. 433, 100 Okl 60.

Settlement subject to statutory lien

Under Minnesota statute, notwithstanding existence of attorney's lien on cause of action, plaintiff and defendant could settle the case subject to the lien—Byram v. Miner, (C C A Minn) 47 F (2d) 112, certiorari denied 51 S Ct. 648, 283 U.S 854, 75 L Ed 1461.

Tort case in admiralty

(1) Parties to lawsuit may compromise their litigation without consulting counsel in tort case in admiralty as in other cases, and, in absence of statute giving attorney lien for fees, the courts will not intervene, unless there has been an attempt to defraud the attorney by collusion between the parties—The Golden Star, (C C A.Cal) 82 F (2d) 687, affirming (D.C.) 9 F Supp. 172

(2) Accordingly where a settlement of a tort case in admiralty was made wholly upon the initiative of libelant, without knowledge of counsel on either side, and libelant had informed his proctor of such settlement asking him for a bill, such proctor was not entitled to recover from defendants for fees, costs, and disbursements and moneys advanced to libelant.—The Golden Star, (D C Cal) 9 F Supp. 172, affirmed (C C A) 82 F (2d) 687.

Good faith

(1) Settlement of litigation where attorney is entitled to lien must be made in good faith and without purpose to defeat the attorney's claim—Nichols v Orr, 166 P. 561, 63 Colo. 333, 2 A L R 449

(2) A client may, without the consent of his attorney, settle and compromise with his adversary all matters in litigation in such manner and upon such terms as he may deem necessary for the protection of his interests notwithstanding the existence of an attorney's lien where the settlement is made in good faith and without a purpose to defeat the lien of attorney—Millsap v. Sparks, 188 P. 135, 21 Ariz 317.

(3) Cause of action is property of client, and not of attorney, and attorney's lien is mere charge on it, subject to the client's right to settle the action in good faith, without regard to attorney's wishes—Conklin v Conklin, 194 N Y S 685, 201 App. Div 170—Ward v. Orsini, 211 N.Y S. 249, 125 Misc. 407.

(4 Where, after judgment, the client settled for less than the judgment without consulting his attorney, employed on a contingent fee, and the adversary retained enough to pay a stipulated portion to the attorney, and there was no evidence securing a judgment or a decree in his favor a party may, without the knowledge or consent of his attorney, compromise the dispute involved, thereby preventing an attorney's lien from attaching, in the first instance, to the money or property received by the client in settlement.[78] However, a settlement made without the consent of an attorney will not be permitted to affect the existing lien of such attorney,[79] and a defendant who settles with a plaintiff without his attorney's of fraud, the attorney could recover nothing from the adversary in excess of the amount so reserved notwithstanding a statute conferring attorneys' liens—Corcoran v. George Kellogg Structural Co, 166 N.Y.S 269, 179 App Div 396

(2) Accordingly where the client compromised and settled the claim before judgment without his attorney's consent, the attorney had no enforceable lien on money paid to the client—Olczak v Marchelewicz, supra.

"Settlement" or "compromise" within lien statute

Any arrangement between litigants or any conduct of one seeking affirmative relief, done at the instance of his adversary, which deprives the litigant of his asserted right against his adversary, constitutes a "settlement" or "compromise" of the cause of action or claim within the statute giving the attorney a lien for fees against the party who settles or compromises with the attorney's client—Smith v Westgate Oil Co, (Okl) 53 P (2d) 1010

As depending on consent of attorney

Litigant who compromises cause of action with client without approval or consent of client's attorney having lien is liable to the attorney for fee, but, if the attorney approves of or consents to the settlement, the litigant is not liable to the attorney—Mathews v. Smith, 39 P (2d) 48, 169 Okl 518

Perpetration or instrumentality of defendant

(1) Under Comp St (1921) §§ 4100–4103, inclusive, defendant is not liable to plaintiffs' attorney for attorney's fee or for lien securing such fee, unless such defendant is the party who perpetrates a compromise or settlement of plaintiffs' cause of action, or is instrumental in doing so without notifying the attorney—Holley & Means v. Foster, 230 P. 879, 104 Okl 196

(2) In an action to recover real estate, notice by defendant to his warrantor, pursuant to Comp St (1921) § 5263, does not as matter of law constitute such warrantor defendant's agent, so as to make him liable to plaintiffs' attorney for conduct of such warrantor in procuring dismissal of plaintiffs' action, without the attorney's consent, where defendant has no part in dismissal—Holley & Means v. Foster, supra.

Necessity for voluntary acts of defendant

(1) Where defendant was liable on a cause of action under Federal Employers' Liability Act, its voluntary agreement with plaintiff as to amount of damages without payment of such amount to plaintiff did not render defendant liable to plaintiff's attorney for destruction of his lien on cause of action, since only payment could destroy the lien—Noell v. Missouri Pac. R Co., 74 S W (2d) 7, 335 Mo 687, 94 A.L.R. 684, followed in 74 S W (2d) 14.

(2) Where the railway against which judgment was obtained in Arkansas notified plaintiff's attorney who had previously begun action in Missouri on the same cause of action to protect his lien, and had knowledge does so at his own risk as to the attorney's lien,[80] especially where a cause of action actually existed between the parties to the cause and there was notice of the attorney's lien,[81] funds impounded in Arkansas and held for a reasonable time, attorney who failed to contest the disposition of impounded funds could not recover the value of the lien from the railway, since the railway did not destroy the lien by its voluntary acts.—Noell v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., supra.

Dismissal of one suit and settlement of second

Where attorney for plaintiff had a contract for a percentage of recovery by suit or compromise, and served notice of his lien on defendant and plaintiff dismissed without his consent and began a second suit by another attorney, which was settled by a payment to plaintiff, the dismissal of the first suit did not abate the former attorney's lien.—Carter v. Dunham, 177 P. 533, 104 Kan. 59.

Ignorance of amount of lien immaterial

The mere fact that defendant in negligence case did not know amount of lien of plaintiff's attorney on cause of action did not permit defendant to disregard such lien and make a settlement with plaintiff since it was incumbent upon defendant to ascertain the amount of the lien, where he knew that there was a lien.—In re Reisfeld, 175 N.Y.S. 365, 187 App.Div. 223, modified on other grounds 124 N.E. 725, 227 N.Y. 137.

Settlement or compromise with adverse party or stranger

Under L.(1909) c. 4 art. 1 § 1, and generally under common law, no compromise or settlement by client could affect or abrogate an attorneys' lien, regardless of whether the settlement or compromise was with the adverse party to the litigation or with a stranger to the action.—Fry v. Wolfe, 234 P. 191, 106 Okl. 289.

Debtor's property in state; violation of agent's instructions

That debtor, who settles with creditor without the consent of the latter's attorney, has no property in the state is wholly immaterial, under Ky.St. § 107, as to lien, and it is also immaterial that the agent who made the settlement violated his instructions in paying the whole claim to the creditor.—Manning v. Edwards, 265 S.W. 492, 205 Ky. 158.

Resignation and appointment of administratrix

That administratrix had resigned and another been appointed, who was not substituted as a party, did not affect the attorney's lien in an action for death of deceased, and settlement with such latter administratrix with knowledge of lien did not defeat the lien.—Leary v. New York Cent. R. Co., 170 N.Y.S. 366, 183 App.Div. 334.

Inability of attorney to prevent settlement

Though statutory attorney's lien does not permit plaintiff's attorney to prevent settlement, it gives him a lien for a percentage of the proceeds which the contract with client called for.—Warren & S. R. R. Co. v. Wilson, 50 S.W.(2d) 976, 185 Ark. 1063.

Burden of justifying settlement on defendant

The burden is on a judgment debtor to justify his settlement with the creditor for less than the face of the judgment in derogation of the lien of plaintiff's attorneys.—Barthels v. Garrels, 227 S.W. 910, 206 Mo.App. 199.

Settlement effective as judgment as regards lien

Settlement made by client has the effect of a judgment on his cause of action for all purposes of attorneys' lien on cause of action under contract for contingent fees, notwithstanding an invalid provision of contract prohibiting client's settlement without attorneys' consent.—Downey v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 232 P. 531, 72 Mont. 166.

Settlement before or after judgment

Attorney's lien on any judgment and proceeds thereof cannot be affected by any settlement by the parties before or after judgment.—Renfro v. Nixon, (Idaho) 45 P.(2d) 595.

Secret agreement on arbitration by parties

Attorney who instituted suit for client, furnished defendant with bill of particulars, and moved to strike out portion of defendant's answer, pending which client and defendant secretly agreed upon arbitration and discontinuance of such suit, was held entitled to a lien upon client's cause of action irrespective of whether any decision, decree, award, judgment, or final order had been entered in such suit.—Wertheim v. Burns Bros., 174 A. 238, 12 N.J.Misc. 676.

Attorney-client contract as lien basis

Contract between widow individually and as administratrix, for employment of attorney to prosecute death action, may serve as basis for attorney's lien upon settlement direct with wrongdoer, though settlement was without authority from probate court.—Ryan v. Chicago, M., St. P. & P. R. Co., 259 Ill.App. 472.

Payment made in settlement of suit

Payment by defendant to administrator of four thousand dollars was held to be made in settlement of a suit brought under Federal Employers' Liability Act, for the death of a railway employee and not to preclude the claim of attorneys representing administrator for services.—Noell v. Chicago & E. I. Ry. Co., (Mo.App.) 21 S.W.(2d) 937, certiorari denied Chicago & E. I. Ry. Co. v. Noell, 50 S.Ct. 465, 281 U.S. 766, 74 L.Ed. 1174.

Cause of action against client

That attorney has a cause of action against his client does not exonerate adverse parties who wrongfully induced breach of contract of retainer.—Lurie v. New Amsterdam Casualty Co., 1 N.E.(2d) 472, 270 N.Y. 379, affirming 281 N.Y.S. 988, 245 App.Div. 710.

Several adverse parties

(1) Where a party, whose interest is actually adverse to client, does not settle or compromise cause of action, such adverse party does not become liable for the attorney's fees under a lien statute.—Boulding v. Slick, 17 P.(2d) 391, 161 Okl. 189.

(2) Moreover the fact that a settlement or compromise with a client by one adverse party to an action inures to the benefit of another, does not render such other liable for attorney's fees.—Boulding v. Slick, supra.

(3) In an attorney's suit for reasonable compensation for services in a former suit against the parties who were defendants therein, for the reason that they had compromised and procured a dismissal of said suit with the attorney's client without notice or consent of plaintiff attorney, and upon the trial the undisputed evidence showed that three of defendants had nothing to do with the settlement, the attorney cannot assign such dismissal as error where judgment was given in favor of the attorney for full compensation and against defendant who secured the dismissal, since, under Rev.L.(1910) § 249, the party settling or compromising is the one liable for the attorney's compensation.—Chowning v. Ledbetter, 208 P. 329, 86 Okl. 269.

Knowledge of pending suit is only and the rule has been applied even though no express notice has been given to him, or to his attorney, of the existence of such lien.[82] Further it is particularly true that after judgment and after the lien has been properly perfected by notice or otherwise, a compromise cannot prejudice the attorney's right to enforce the judgment to the extent of the lien.[83]

Where settlement provides for lien. Of course a settlement which provides for the lien will be upheld.[84]

Fraudulent or collusive settlements. The lien of an attorney will be protected against a collusive settlement of litigation in fraud of such lien.[85] Where a settlement is made collusively and with the purpose of depriving the attorneys of their compensation, the court will withhold its sanction of the adjustment in suits to enforce attorneys' liens, although ordinarily anxious to ratify the honest settlement of a pending action.[86] While it has been held that a settlement is presumed to have been made in good faith,[87] yet a settlement made at the instigation of the attorneys for defendant, without the knowledge of the attorneys for plaintiff, and without making suitable and sure provision for their compensation, is viewed with suspicion,[88] the mere fact that an action is settled without the consent of plaintiff's attorney, and with no adequate consideration for the settlement, being considered evidence of bad faith.[89]

Employer and insurance carrier, having notice of attorney's relation in proceeding to recover compensation, cannot satisfy award until attorney's lien is satisfied—Camp v U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co, 157 S E 209, 42 Ga App 653

Adverse party having actual notice

Where attorneys were retained under a written agreement, and performed services under the agreement, and the adverse party had actual notice that they claimed a lien upon the cause of action and settled the action without attorneys' knowledge and while they were still acting as attorneys, such adverse party is liable to the attorneys for amount of lien—In re Reisfeld, 175 N.Y.S 365, 187 App Div 233, modified on other grounds 124 N.E. 725, 227 N Y. 137

Settlement by defendant without notice of pending suit

The lien given an attorney on a suit by Code (1907) § 3011, is not affected by settlement with attorney's client, the plaintiff, by defendant without knowledge of pendency of the suit—Alabama Fuel & Iron Co v. Denson, 94 So 311, 208 Ala 337.

Client's success condition to recovery by attorney

Under Comp L (1909) §§ 276, 277, where attorney files a lien claim and the case is compromised by the client without his consent, he may recover fee from the party settling with client if his client should have prevailed, but not otherwise—Crump v Guyer, 157 P. 321, 60 Okl 232, 2 A.L.R 331.

Dismissal merged in judgment

Under Rev St (1909) §§ 964, 965, where it appears that litigation is such that it would, if successful, result in judgment on which counsel would have a lien for fees earned in the case, plaintiff cannot, over the attorney's objection, withdraw an appeal or writ of error, much less dismiss his cause of action, after it has become merged in the judgment—Argeropoulos v Kansas City Rys Co, 212 S.W. 369, 201 Mo App 287

Client's right to settle after judgment absent fraudulent intent

Even after judgment, it has been held that a client has a right to settle with defendant for a less sum, if the settlement is not intended to defraud his attorney—Machcinski v Lehigh Valley R. Co, (C.C.A.N.Y.) 272 F 920

Settlement pending appeal

(1) Where plaintiff, pending defendant's appeal, accepted a lesser amount in full settlement, and also stipulated for a dismissal of the appeal, without the knowledge of his attorney, whose lien, of which defendant had notice, was on file when judgment was rendered, the settlement and agreement to dismiss could not deprive attorney of right to enforce lien on entire amount of judgment—Griggs v Chicago, R. I. & P Ry Co, 177 N.W. 135, 104 Neb 301

(2) Where litigation, if successful, would result in a recovery of property on which the counsel of plaintiff in error would have a lien for fees, plaintiff in error cannot withdraw his writ of error over his counsel's objection—Corbin v. McCrary, 96 S E 445, 22 Ga App 472.

Where a lien for the fees of an attorney who prosecutes or assists in the prosecution of a bastardy proceeding attaches to a final judgment of conviction against the putative father of the child, and for the payment of money for its support for a specific term of years, the mother, in person or by her next friend, and the accused cannot, by a fraudulent agreement after judgment, deprive the attorney of fees for the services so rendered by him—State v O'Brien, 109 S E 830, 89 W Va 634.

Settlement after judgment as constructive fraud

Settlement between parties after judgment for plaintiff without knowledge or consent of plaintiff's attorneys, who had a lien on the judgment, has been held to be a constructive fraud on attorneys—Hammond, W & E C Ry. Co v. Kaput, 110 N E 109, 61 Ind App. 543

Absence of attorney not rendering settlement fraudulent

A settlement of litigation made between defendant's attorney of record and plaintiff, at latter's instance, and recognizing lien of plaintiff's attorney for half of amount paid, is not fraudulent because made in his absence—Nichols v Orr, 106 P 561, 63 Colo. 333, 2 A.L.R 449

Where fund in hands of court; proceedings in rem. Where a fund in the hands of the court has been impounded and placed there through the services of plaintiff's attorney, the lien of the attorney thereon cannot be defeated by a subsequent settlement between the parties and the dismissal of the suit [90] The same is true, it seems, where the suit is in the nature of a proceeding in rem wherein the attorney's lien after attaching at the commencement of the suit cannot be defeated by a compromise and a settlement between the parties.[91]

Necessity of final judgment. Where a judgment has been obtained which has not become a finality, for instance, where a motion for a new trial is pending and undisposed of, or where an appeal has been granted, a compromise settlement in which plaintiff's attorney is ignored and to which he does not assent does not destroy his lien [92] In such case, however, the amount of the value of the lien is controlled by the settlement made by the client, provided it is an honest settlement, and is not necessarily controlled by the amount of the judgment itself [93] If an appeal is taken on which the judgment is reversed, and thereafter the parties settle the case by compromise, the attorney's lien does not attach to the amount of the compromise unless it can be clearly shown that defendant had notice of it,[94] or unless by statute lien rights are conferred upon the cause of action or upon money in the hands of the adverse party.[95]

When judgment considered in existence for purposes of lien. It has been held that, while the judgment does not properly exist until it has been duly rendered and entered, yet, so far as the question of the attorney's lien in this connection is concerned, it exists from the time the judgment is ordered to be entered [96] Other cases hold that, where the parties settle the suit before judgment is actually entered, the attorney for plaintiff can claim no lien.[97]

Fee payable out of proceeds of suit. Where an attorney's fee is payable, by special contract, out of the proceeds of the suit, the attorney has an inchoate lien upon the property for his fee as soon as the action is commenced; and the client cannot defeat such lien by dismissing the action before trial, over the attorney's objection, without first paying, or properly securing, the attorney's fees [98]

Satisfaction of claim or judgment in disregard of attorney's lien. Plaintiff's attorney cannot be deprived of his lien by defendant's satisfaction of plaintiff's claim in disregard of such lien.[99] Similarly if defendant satisfies the judgment against himself without reference to such lien, after notice of it, he does so at his peril.[1] Moreover the lien of an attorney for a judgment creditor cannot be defeated by the judgment debtor's unconditional payment of the amount of the judgment to the clerk of the court.[2] Further a release of all claims given by plaintiff cannot operate in such cases to affect the attorney's right to a lien on the judgment.[3]

b. Remedies of Attorney

(1) In general
(2) Summary remedies
(3) Continuing original suit
(4) Independent action

(1) In General

Attorneys have appropriate remedies for the enforcement of their liens notwithstanding settlements between their clients and adverse parties.

Notwithstanding the settlement of a case in disregard of an attorney's lien, it may be enforced by appropriate remedies.[4] An attorney cannot, however, sue on an agreement, not made for his benefit, between his client and a third person.[5]

Bill of discovery. Where a client settles a case in violation of the rights of his attorney he may, on a proper case shown, be entitled to the aid of a bill of discovery to enforce his rights under a lien statute.[6]

Dismissal of appeal. The lien of an attorney may be protected by the dismissal of an appeal where a settlement is made pending such appeal.[7]

Election between independent action and intervention

Where an attorney has a lien for his services upon a cause of action under Gen St (1913) § 4955, and the action is settled by the parties before trial, the attorney may elect to enforce his lien rights by an independent action against the defendant or by intervention in the original action.—Middelstadt v. City of Minneapolis, 179 N W 890, 147 Minn 186

Under statute making adverse parties liable for fees

(1) Statute providing for attorney's liens and making the adverse party liable to attorney for fee under contract for settling or compromising cause of action is held not to abrogate or limit the common-law rights of attorney against his client on the contract of employment—Callahan v Cowley & Riddle, 245 P 48, 117 Okl 58

(2) The statutory right of the attorney to hold the adverse party liable for fee is remedy additional or concurrent with that provided at the common law against his client—Callahan v Cowley & Riddle, supra.

(3) Accordingly it has been held under the statute in question that an attorney, on a secret compromise with his client, may pursue a remedy against the adverse party for payment of the fees or against the client, or against both, on the attorney's one cause of action, until his judgment is extinguished by one satisfaction.—Callahan v Cowley & Riddle, supra

(4) Moreover under such statutory provisions where parties to a judgment in the trial court settle their controversy after an appeal to the supreme court, the appeal will be dismissed, notwithstanding the attorneys for defendants have a contract for a contingent fee and the settlement was without their consent—Ingram v Johnson, 176 P. 241, 71 Okl 171

Surreptitious and collusive settlement after notice

Where an attorney having a contract for a percentage of the proceeds of a client's cause of action notifies the adverse litigant of a lien claimed, surreptitious and collusive settlement of claim gives attorney cause of action against adverse litigant for fee—Goldberg's Loan Office v Evans, 37 P (2d) 286, 169 Okl 397

Release of adverse party by client pending second trial

Under Code (1907) § 3011, subd 2, attorney of plaintiff in action for personal injuries against railroad, who secured judgment which was reversed, could enforce plaintiff's right of action to secure his charges for procuring judgment, although plaintiff, without attorney's consent, and to defraud him, gave defendant a release pending second trial—Lowery v. Illinois Cent R Co, 69 So 954, 195 Ala 144

Attorney, who was retained by client who had been injured by automobile owned by one who had been insured, had a cause of action against an insurance company whose agents unlawfully induced the client to breach contract of retainer by threatening client that unless he repudiated contract the client would receive no compensation—Lurie v New Amsterdam Casualty Co, 1 N E (2d) 472, 270 N Y 379, affirming 281 N Y S 988, 245 App Div. 710.

Employer and compensation insurance carrier

Attorney representing a workmen's compensation claimant and having a lien for compensation may after settlement without the attorney's consent, recover the amount of such lien as fees against the employer and an insurance carrier by seeking in superior court judgment, on award, for his fees—Camp v U. S Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 157 S E 209, 42 Ga App 653

Prevention of payment by judgment debtor

7. Hammond, W & E C Ry Co v. Kaput, 110 N.E 109, 61 Ind App 513

Settlement in fraud of attorneys

(1) Where settlement is made by parties in fraud of plaintiff's attorneys during pendency of appeal, the appeal will be dismissed as a protection to the attorney's lien on the Procedure after compromise and settlement by parties. In order that an attorney, having a lien for services, may proceed in the original suit for the purpose of recovering his fees, it is usually necessary for him to have the stipulation of settlement and discontinuance set aside or stricken from the files[8] This is not necessary in all cases, however;[9] as, for instance, where there has been no obstacle to the continuance of the action put upon the record, but only an agreement of compromise or of release between the parties.[10] In most jurisdictions the case must then be sent to trial upon the merits, and the attorney must establish plaintiff's right to recover on the facts independently of the question of fees[11] In Iowa this is not necessary.[12] A motion for leave to prosecute after a settlement and to vacate a satisfaction should be made in the attorney's name, but the suit should proceed in the client's name.[13]

(2) Summary Remedies

Ordinarily an attorney may be entitled to enforce his lien by summary remedies after a settlement in fraud of his lien.

Ordinarily a satisfaction of the judgment in fraud of the lien may be vacated on motion and the attorney will be allowed to enforce the judgment for the amount of his lien,[14] although there exists authority to the effect that after settlement an attorney's lien rights cannot be enforced by summary proceedings[15] At all events the satisfaction will not be set aside unless it is in effect judgment—Hammond, W. & E C Ry Co. v. Kaput, 110 N.E. 109, 61 Ind App 543.

(2) An attorney who instituted an action for his clients as payees against the maker of a note may prosecute the original suit to recover his fees under Civ Code (1910) § 3864, where it was settled out of court without his authority—Glennville Inv Co. v Jordan & Rogers, 85 S.E. 1049, 144 Ga. 14.

Satisfaction of judgment entered without consideration

Where plaintiff entered satisfaction of the judgment without consideration, a motion by his attorneys to have the satisfaction set aside to the extent of the lien for their contingent fee is the proper method of procedure—Barthels v Garrels, 227 S.W 910, 206 Mo App. 199

Setting aside satisfied judgment to extent of lien

Where judgment for plaintiff was satisfied, without satisfying the lien of plaintiff's attorney upon the judgment, the satisfaction of the judgment will be set aside to the extent of the attorney's lien.—Weitzel v. Schmitt, 178 N.Y.S. 429

Setting aside satisfaction of judgment justified

Where plaintiff, who had agreed to give his attorneys one-third of the amount recovered, summarily discharged them because they properly refused to represent him against another client of theirs, and thereafter filed a satisfaction of the judgment for the stated reason that he was tired of litigation, although he was then engaging in other litigation, and shortly thereafter accepted employment under defendants, the trial court was justified in setting aside the satisfaction of the judgment to the extent of the attorneys' lien—Barthels v. Garrels, 227 S.W. 910, 206 Mo App 199.

Reinstatement of satisfied judgment proper

Reinstating satisfied judgment to extent of amount due plaintiff's attorney for services and costs was held to be proper—Balluff v Balluff, 211 N.W. 462, 169 Minn 266

Judgment for plaintiff's attorney properly allowed

Where plaintiff's attorney had a contract for one-half of recovery, and, under Gen St (1913) § 4955, was entitled to a lien for his agreed compensation, and the parties settled before trial without his consent, he was properly allowed judgment against defendant—Nelson v. Berkner, 167 N.W 423, 140 Minn 504.

Jurisdictional necessity for reinstatement of cause

Attorney may have dismissal of action by client without protecting his interests set aside and cause reinstated to enforce ancillary remedy, but such reinstatement is a jurisdictional prerequisite to power of court to determine and allow the attorney's fee on motion in the original action—Wood v. Hines, 245 P. 846, 117 Okl 86.

15. Levy v. Public Service Ry. Co, 103 A. 171, 91 N.J.Law 183, affirming 98 A. 847.

As against adverse party

Under Attorney's Lien Act, an attorney's compensation as against the party with whom his client has settled cannot be determined in a summary proceeding—Levy v Public Service Ry. Co, 103 A 171, 91 N. J.Law 183, affirming 98 A. 847.

in fraud of the lien, and such course is necessary in order to protect the attorney.[16]

Cancellation of undertaking given to stay execution. An attorney may be entitled to have canceled an undertaking given to stay the execution of the judgment;[17] but he is not entitled to have an undertaking canceled in which he has no interest and upon which he has no lien.[18]

Vacation of satisfaction before issuance of execution. Where summary remedies are available to the attorney on settlement the satisfaction must be vacated before execution can issue[19] except where it does not appear that the alleged satisfaction piece was ever filed and the judgment satisfied of record.[20]

(3) Continuing Original Suit

It has been both affirmed and denied that an attorney may enforce his lien by continuing a suit which has been settled in disregard of his lien.

Where an attorney can show that a settlement has resulted in depriving him of his lien for fees or costs, he may be entitled to prosecute the action to trial and final judgment in the name of his client with a view to the protection of such attorney's rights therein.[21] There exists, however, authority to the contrary effect.[22] At all events since the

Judgment alone to be looked to in absence of fraud

Where judgment debtor, when a compromise of the judgment was made, did not know of contract with attorney creating lien on judgment, the attorney is not entitled to have such satisfaction of judgment set aside, but must look to the judgment creditor alone for compensation since there was no fraud in the compromise—Millsap v Sparks, 188 P. 135, 21 Ariz 317.

6 C J. p 798 note 44.

Champerty in contract executed after settlement

Right of plaintiff's attorney to enforce his lien under Code (1907) § 3011, on the suit after it had been settled by the parties, is unaffected by any champerty in contract between plaintiff and the attorney after the settlement whereby they should divide whatever sum the attorney should recover in proceeding to enforce his lien, since this was not the contract out of which the lien originally arose.—Alabama Fuel & Iron Co. v. Denson, 94 So. 311, 208 Ala. 337.

Refusal of discontinuance

(1) Courts have inherent powers to refuse discontinuance of a cause, when thereby the lien rights of attorneys under their contracts with their clients would be defeated, if the attempted discontinuance is intended to defraud the attorneys, in which case the court will permit the litigation to be continued by the attorney—Frear v. Lewis, 195 N.Y. S 3, 201 App.Div. 660

(2) The statutory remedies given an attorney by Judiciary L. § 475, are not exclusive, but are cumulative of the remedy under the inherent power of the court to prevent a discontinuance in fraud of the attorney's lien rights; and such discontinuance can be prevented where the client is insolvent and there is no showing he received any compensation for the discontinuance to which the statutory lien could attach—Frear v Lewis, supra.

Subrogation to original cause of action

Under Gen St (1913) § 4955, as amended by L.(1917) c 98 (Gen St Supp [1917] § 4955), an attorney has a lien for his compensation upon his client's cause of action under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, and in enforcing it in the original action, after a settlement made without his consent, he proceeds as one subrogated to the original cause of action, so far as necessary to protect his rights—Miner v. Chicago, B & Q R. Co., 179 N W. 483, 147 Minn 21.

Remedy upheld notwithstanding criticism

While this remedy has been severely criticized as illogical and clumsy, yet it has been upheld—Miedreich v. Rank, 82 N.E. 117, 119, 40 Ind App 393—Fischer-Hansen v Brooklyn Heights R. Co, 66 N E 395, 173 N Y 492, 499, reversing 71 N Y S. 513, 63 App Div. 356—6 C.J. p 799 note 45.

Leave of court

As a general rule, the attorney must first obtain leave of court to prosecute the suit after settlement—Coughlin v. New York Cent., etc, R. Co, 71 N Y 443, 27 Am R. 75—6 C J p 799 note 47

Discretion of court

Whether or not the remedy shall be allowed in a particular case rests in the discretion of the court.—Howard v. Ward, 139 N.W 771, 31 S D. 114—Gowran v. Lennon, 143 N.W. 678, 154 Wis. 566

Control and duty of court

"When a case is made permitting the attorney to proceed in the action, notwithstanding the settlement between the parties and their stipulation to discontinue, it is the duty of the court to direct as to the time and manner of the future prosecution of the action, and to watch the proceedings and doings of the attorney so as to fully protect the rights of both parties, and not unnecessarily annoy or embarrass the defendant when he has acted in good faith. . . It would be manifestly unjust and inequitable to compel the defendants to pay the costs of the plaintiff's attorney until the latter has made every reasonable effort, and failed therein, to secure their payment from the plaintiff, or out of the fund on which he has a lien, and which is also in equity primarily liable therefor as between the parties to the action As the fund is ample, he should be required to pursue it, with due diligence and promptness, and fail in a reasonable effort to reach the same, before the court should allow him to prosecute the action and compel the defendants to pay his costs."—Quinlan v. Birge, 43 Hun (N.Y.) 483, 485.

ceedings, except as noted hereafter in this paragraph, general rules are applicable as respects parties[43] and process.[44] Further, as respects or relating to juris-defense that attorneys other than the attorney of record were parties to the employment contract with plaintiff, and that on record attorney's recovery he would be required to account to such other attorneys —Gulf States Steel Co. v Justice, 87 So 211, 204 Ala. 577.

(2) Petitioner attorney, who was employed on a contingent fee basis by the mother of a minor to prosecute a claim for the minor's personal injuries, who gave notice to defendants by registered mail of his claim of lien (Smith-Hurd Rev St [1933] c 13 § 14), and who thereafter was supplanted by other counsel who settled the claim, was entitled to the enforcement of his lien, as against defendants' contentions that petitioner's contract of employment was not a contract with the mother and next friend of the minor, that the contract did not purport to be made on behalf of the minor and was therefor void, and that the notice of lien was not based on the contract, for the reason that the notice stated, contrary to fact, that petitioner was employed by the minor, etc., and regardless of whether defendants retained out of the settlement an amount sufficient to satisfy the lien —Caruso v. Pelling, 271 Ill App. 318.

(3) Defendants in a personal injury action, brought in the circuit court and eventually settled other than through petitioner attorney who originally was employed to prosecute the claim and who served on defendants his notice of lien (Smith-Hurd Rev St [1933] c 13 § 14), was not in a position to invoke, for the purpose of defeating petitioner's right to the thirty-three and one-third per cent fee agreed on in petitioner's contract of employment, the probate court's rule whereby not more than twenty-five per cent. of a settlement for personal injuries will be allowed for attorney's fees —Caruso v. Pelling, supra.

(4) In a suit by one of the regional counsel for the brotherhood of railway trainmen against a railroad company to enforce against respondent a lien, claimed under the attorneys' lien law, pursuant to a contingent fee contract with one of respondent's injured employees who was a member of the brotherhood and with whom respondent, without petitioner's consent or knowledge, made a settlement after suit for damages had been brought and after respondent had been served with the statutory notice of petitioner's lien, it was held that respondent could not successfully contend that the alleged fact that petitioner had, at the request of the brotherhood's general counsel, paid half of the salary of a brotherhood inspector, was a circumstance which tended to support respondent's charge that petitioner had been guilty of unethical and unlawful conduct which defeated his right to recover against respondent, where the evidence showed that the salary payment was in the nature of an advancement to the brotherhood and that petitioner had been reimbursed therefor before the settlement between respondent and petitioner's client was made —Ryan v Pennsylvania R. Co., 268 Ill App 364

(5) Pleas of accord and satisfaction in personal injury action were not responsive to right of recovery by intervening attorneys claiming a statutory lien and settlement without their consent —Alabama Produce Co v. Smith, 150 So. 148, 227 Ala 330

43. U.S —Byram v Miner, (C C A Minn.) 47 F (2d) 112, certiorari denied 51 S Ct. 648, 283 U S 854, 75 L Ed 1461.

Client as party

In attorney's suit under Rev.L (1910) § 249, to recover the amount of a lien securing his fee against an adverse litigant, the attorney's client, whose action has been compromised and settled, is not a necessary party —Oklahoma Coal Co. v. Hays, 176 P. 931, 71 Okl. 248

Attorney as party

(1) After settlement of the original action is disregard of the lien of an attorney he may be permitted to enforce his lien by intervening as a party in the original suit — Byram v. Miner, (C C A Minn.) 47 F (2d) 112, certiorari denied 51 S. Ct. 648, 283 U S 854, 75 L Ed 1461

(2) Accordingly where plaintiff, without consent of her attorney, hired on contract contingent on success, settled the suit, the attorney could intervene in the suit and have a lien declared on subject-matter of suit for the reasonable value of his services —Schutt v. Bush, 178 N.W 48, 210 Mich 495

(3) However, the right of attorney to intervene in client's action should be limited to actions in which the attorney is given a specific present interest in the subject-matter of the litigation —Kelly v. Smith, 268 P 1057, 204 Cal 496.

(4) Moreover the right of an attorney to intervene and assert his attorney's lien under Code (1907) § 3011, on a settlement by client without such attorney's consent, is available only to attorney of record at the time of the settlement, although other attorneys were, together with such attorney of record, parties to the contract of employment, and the names of such other attorneys were omitted from the complaint by inadvertence —Gulf States Steel Co v. Justice, 87 So. 211, 204 Ala. 577

(5) Under Code (1907) § 3011, subd 2, giving attorneys at law liens upon suits, judgments, and decrees, the attorney of record of an administrator, in administrator's action for death of his intestate, could assert and enforce his lien by intervention on administrator's settlement of suit without the knowledge and consent of the attorney, in view of §§ 6085–6088, relating to the administration of trust estates —Gulf States Steel Co. v Justice, supra

(6) Proceeding, by intervention of plaintiff's attorney in suit settled by parties, to enforce his lien thereon, given by Code (1907) § 3011, amounts to a continuation of the original suit for the attorney's benefit, and his petition for intervention becomes in substance a part of the complaint, and any essential allegation of either, if questioned, must be proved by him —Alabama Fuel & Iron Co. v Denson, 94 So. 311, 208 Ala 337

(7) Intervention by motion or petition by attorneys showing their rights is necessary in order to render an accord and satisfaction unavailing as a bar to the further prosecution of a suit by counsel for the enforcement of a lien on the suit by the collection in judgment of their fees, a demurrer to the plea of accord and satisfaction being insufficient —Wilson v Gulf States Steel Co., 81 So 581, 202 Ala. 639

Service of process

(1) In proceeding by intervention by attorneys against railroad to enforce their lien, under Acts (1909) p 892, on proceeds of settlement made by railroad with their clients, it was not necessary that the railroad should again be served with process since the attorneys became parties to the original action by force of statute.—St. Louis, I M & S Ry. Co v Hays & Ward, 195 S W. 28, 128 Ark. 471.

diction,[45] and pleading and proof,[46] general rules | are applicable in such proceedings to enforce lien.

(2) In proceeding by attorney to fix lien for services for plaintiff rendered in action allegedly surreptitiously settled, service of petition and notice on attorney who appeared for defendant in the action instead of service on such defendant in person was held to be insufficient—Entenberg v Goodman, 274 N Y S 443, 153 Misc 205, affirmed Fischel v Boardman, 275 N Y S 974

Equitable jurisdiction

(1) Independent actions by attorneys to enforce their liens after settlement by the parties to the original action in disregard of such liens are held to fall within the jurisdiction of equity—Boulding v Slick, 17 P (2d) 391, 161 Okl 189—Jones v Ralls, 8 P.(2d) 665, 152 Okl 95—Simpson v. Baker, 252 P. 834, 123 Okl 118.

(2) Moreover it has been held that, unless an action at law is expressly authorized by statute, a court of equity is the only court having jurisdiction to enforce such liens—Standidge v Chicago R Co, 98 N E 963, 254 Ill 524, 40 L R A (N S) 529, Ann Cas 1913C 65—Pennsylvania Co v Thatcher, 85 N E 55, 78 Ohio St 175—Werner v George Zehler Provision Co, 31 Ohio Cir Ct. 632.

(3) At any rate the enforcement of a lien of plaintiff's attorney in an action at law against defendant, after settlement of case without his knowledge must be by suit in equity under state statute (Judiciary L § 475)—Albright v. Baltimore & O R. Co., (D C N Y.) 22 F (2d) 832

(4) Attorney may enforce, as against his client, claim for compensation for legal services rendered in case begun in court, partially prosecuted and settled before final judgment or decree, by independent suit in equity to foreclose attorney's lien.—Universal Oil Products Co v Standard Oil Co of Indiana, (D C Mo) 6 F Supp 37, affirmed (C C A) German v. Universal Oil Products Co, 77 F (2d) 70.

Federal court

(1) Federal court had no jurisdiction to grant relief, demanded in an intervening bill of plaintiff's attorney for recovery of compensation from amount received by plaintiff in settlement of litigation before entry of judgment or decree, where there was no property in the court's custody—German v Universal Oil Products Co, (C C A Mo) 77 F (2d) 70, affirming (D C) Universal Oil Products Co v Standard Oil Co of Indiana, 6 F Supp 37.

(2) Federal court, having no jurisdiction to grant relief demanded in intervening bill of plaintiff's attorney to recover compensation from amount received by plaintiff in settlement of litigation, cannot aid attorney as court officer, though disposed to protect such officers in collection of their fees and compensation—German v. Universal Oil Products Co, supra.

State court

(1) A state court has jurisdiction of an action by an attorney to enforce his lien on the proceeds of a settlement made by the parties to an action brought by him as attorney in a court of the state, although before the settlement the action had been removed to a federal court—Oishei v Pennsylvania R Co, 102 N Y S 368, 117 App Div. 110, 116, affirmed 85 N E 1113, 191 N Y. 544—6 C J p 801 note 72

(2) Where an attorney has a lien on a cause of action arising under the Federal Employers' Liability Act for his services, upon settlement of the action by the parties without payment of his fees, he may enforce his lien in an action in a state court—Scharmann v. Union Pac Ry Co., 175 N W. 554, 144 Minn 290.

(3) Circuit court had jurisdiction of all parties to, as well as subject-matter of, proceeding for enforcement of attorney's lien on interest of deceased complainant's surviving husband and two sons, substituted as complainants in chancery suit, wherein record showed service of summons on minor son, where notice of lien was given defendant by registered mail on day of entry of decree confirming parties' settlement of litigation and again about two months later—Catherwood v Morris, 196 N E 519, 360 Ill. 473.

Complaint or petition held sufficient

(1) Complaint against a client and defendants in a slander action, wherein an attorney was employed on retainer and contingent basis for a joint tortious agreement settling claims, and preventing the attorney from receiving compensation, secured by lien was held not to state a cause of action—Perry v. Atlantic Coast Life Ins. Co., 164 S E. 753, 166 S C 270.

(2) Petition by attorney to enforce a lien and to recover damages for an unauthorized settlement by defendant with client, thus depriving the attorney of a contingent fee, was held to have stated a cause of action without any allegation of fraud—Hale v Terminal R R Ass'n of St. Louis, (Mo App) 12 S W (2d) 941.

(3) Petition to recover attorney's fees, based on defendant's fraud in obtaining postponement of suit against him and settling direct with plaintiff's client, was sufficient under a lien statute—Stone v Sullivan, 293 P 232, 146 Okl. 113

(4) In an attorney's action for being deprived of his lien, a petition alleging that the attorney "had and still has" a lien was sufficient—Wolf v Shulz Folding Box Co, (Mo App) 44 S W.(2d) 866

Issues

(1) Where the original plaintiffs accepted settlement, and their attorney filed a petition in intervention to prosecute the suit to collect the amount of a lien securing his fee, the question of liability must be determined as it would have been in the prosecution of the original suit.—Fail v Gulf States Steel Co, 87 So 612, 205 Ala 148.

(2) In an attorney's suit against a client and the adverse party for the amount of a lien securing the attorney's fee, the question to be determined is whether the client and the adverse party, without notice to attorney, compromised the litigation—Bruce v Anderson, 18 P (2d) 877, 161 Okl 248

(3) In determining the value of an attorney's services, his ability, standing, experience, and reputation as an attorney in the prosecution of such actions, also the nature of the controversy, the questions involved, necessity of his services, importance of the litigation, and value of property involved, and time and labor expended under contract of employment, together with investigations of legal questions involved, should be considered in an attorney's action to recover the amount of his lien securing his fees as against a party compromising and settling an action without such attorney's consent, in view of Rev L. (1910) § 249—Chowning v Ledbetter, 208 P. 329, 86 Okl 269.

(4) Where an attorney has furnished assistance to a needy client and a resultant charge of unethical conduct becomes a material issue in a case, wherein such attorney seeks to enforce his lien after a settlement by the parties, the pertinent inquiry is whether the assistance was rendered only with the intent of subserving the ends of justice.—Ryan v. Pennsylvania R Co, 268 Ill App. 364

(5) Attorney suing for being deprived of lien by defendants' settlement with client without attorney's consent could not claim that issue of waiver and abandonment was not in case because not pleaded, where the answer consisted of a general denial and statement that attorney "abandoned" any representation of his client.—Griffith v Walesby, (Mo App) 91 S W (2d) 212

(6) In an attorney's suit against a client and the adverse party for attorney's fee, the question is whether the client and adverse party without notice perfected the arrangement depriving client of right against adverse party.—Western States Oil & Land Co v Helms, 288 P. 964, 143 Okl 206, 72 A L R 857

Pleading and proof required

(1) Attorney suing to enforce liability for contingent fee imposed by L (1909) c 4 p 117, against an adverse party who had compromised with the attorney's client such attorney must establish his client's meritorious cause of action and the amount client would have been entitled to recover.—Culver v. Diamond, 167 P. 223, 64 Okl 271.

(2) In an action under Comp L. (1909) §§ 274–277, relating to attorneys' liens to recover an attorney fee from an adverse litigant, plaintiff must show that the litigation was compromised without notice or opportunity to him to be present and establish his client's rights.—Whitehead v. Spriggs, 158 P. 439, 58 Okl. 42.

(3) Where, on plaintiffs' accepting settlement in the original suit, their attorney petitioned to intervene to prosecute the suit to recover his fee, the petition of intervention should show settlement of the original suit.—Fail v Gulf States Steel Co, 87 So. 612, 205 Ala 148

(4) In an action by an attorney under Comp St (1921) § 4103, against adverse party settling with the attorney's client without such attorney's knowledge or consent it devolves on the attorney to show the extent of the probable recovery in the client's action to the end that the attorney's fee secured by lien may be properly fixed.—Orwig v. Emerick, 231 P 234, 107 Okl 134.

(5) In proceeding to establish attorneys' lien, where action for injuries was settled without attorneys' knowledge or consent, for one-third of probable recovery, the amount of such probable recovery was controlled by the extent of injuries, and proof of such injuries from which the trial court might reasonably determine their extent must be offered.—Sterling Milk Products Co v. Brown, (Okl) 49 P.(2d) 68.

(6) Attorney seeking to establish a lien against defendant after compromise without such attorney's knowledge may prove the amount which the suit might have recovered in case of trial, and thus establish his lien under his contingent fee contract on his probable recovery.—Sterling Milk Products Co. v Brown, 294 P. 117, 146 Okl 302.

(7) Attorney, seeking to have costs awarded his client on a dismissal of a suit against it applied to the satisfaction of his lien thereon, was not bound to prove that he could not otherwise collect his charges.—Flashnick v Burke, 162 N.Y S 867, 176 App Div 867

(8) Attorney is not required to resort to allegations or proof of fraud in order to set aside satisfaction of judgment to enforce attorney's lien.—Renfro v. Nixon, (Idaho) 45 P (2d) 595

(9) Where an attorney was employed to bring suit, and it was compromised without notice to him, and he sues the adverse party under Rev L (1910) § 249, for the amount of his lien securing compensation for services, the attorney need not show the merits of his client's cause, but merely the employment, a suit, compliance with a lien statute, a compromise by the adverse litigant without notice, and the value of the services rendered.—Oklahoma Coal Co. v. Hays, 176 P. 981, 71 Okl 248

(10) In an action under Comp St. (1921) § 4102, to recover an attorney's fee from adverse litigant, on the theory that the attorney has been deprived of the protection of his lien, it is necessary for plaintiff to show that the litigation has been compromised and settled without notice or opportunity for him to be present and present his client's cause on its merits.—Cooper v Jackson, 231 P. 223, 104 Okl. 277.

(11) In an action for deforcement of attorneys' lien after settlement with client, the attorneys need not prove that the client's claim was meritorious.—Noell v. Chicago & E. I Ry Co, (Mo App) 81 S W (2d) 937, certiorari denied Chicago & E. I Ry Co v Noell, 50 S Ct 465, 281 U S 766, 74 L Ed 1174

(12) Where a defendant settles with plaintiff without the consent of plaintiff's attorney, and the latter is permitted to continue the action to assert his lien and recover his fees, before he may recover he must put in such proof as would be required if the action was proceeding for the benefit of his client.—Holbert v Allred, 102 S E. 192, 24 Ga. App. 727.

(13) The mere fact that the defendant in settlement without the consent of plaintiff's attorney pays less than the full amount is at most an admission in the nature of a compromise, and would not prove that any liability in fact existed.—Holbert v Allred, supra

(14) Attorney, suing for unauthorized settlement, was held to have established a case for nominal recovery, although not showing the value of settlement whereby the client was restored to his job.—Hale v Terminal R R Ass'n of St. Louis, (Mo App) 12 S W (2d) 941.

(15) Where defendant, without knowledge or consent of plaintiff's attorney, settled action to recover realty, such attorney may be entitled to recover the amount of his lien from defendant without proof of the client's right to recover, in the action settled or defendant's liability therein.—Jones v. Ralls, 8 P (2d) 665, 152 Okl 95

(16) On the other hand under particular statutory provisions an attorney suing to enforce liability on a lien for a contingent fee, imposed by L (1909) c 4, against adverse party who had compromised with his client, must show the client's meritorious cause of action, and what the client would have been entitled to receive.—Allen v. Shepherd, 169 P 1115, 69 Okl. 47.

Immaterial allegation

Under Rev Codes § 6422, giving an attorney's lien, in attorney's action to foreclose lien, allegation in complaint that payment of final installment of amount agreed to be paid for settlement of actions which plaintiff instituted was made in city out of state to deprive plaintiff of his lien was held to be immaterial.—Walsh v. Hoskins, 162 P. 960, 53 Mont 198.

Variance

(1) An attorney suing for damages on account of a settlement between his client, plaintiff in a suit, and defendant, which rendered his lien valueless, did not set out to a certainty the amount of damage in accordance with the allegations regarding his contract with his client as required by correct pleading, where he merely alleged value of cause of action of client was thirty thousand dollars, and he was damaged fifteen thousand dollars.—Cawley v Burke, 110 A. 609, 43 R I. 188.

(2) Even if allegation of attorney's petition for intervention for enforcement of attorney's lien on the suit—that defendant with knowledge of pendency of the suit settled it with plaintiff, without satisfying the attorney's lien—be material, not-

withstanding prior statement of facts authorizing the attorney to further prosecute the suit despite the settlement, there is substantial conformity of proof thereto, by showing, not actual knowledge, but such knowledge as could be imputed by reason of the actual knowledge of facts which would have led an ordinary person to knowledge, the legal effect being the same in either case—Alabama Fuel & Iron Co. v Denson, 94 So 311, 208 Ala 337

(3) Where defendants, moved against by plaintiff's attorney, denied the existence of an alleged contract of employment pleaded by him, and consequently the existence of an alleged lien thereof, on issues so joined of contract or no contract they could not be called upon to meet proof of any other contract and lien, as an amount due attorney not on express contract but on quantum meruit—Mills v Metropolitan St Ry Co, 221 S W. 1, 282 Mo. 118

47. Minn—Holloway v Dickinson, 163 N W. 791, 137 Minn 410, affirmed Dickinson v Stiles, 38 S Ct 415, 246 U S 631, 62 L Ed 908, Ann Cas 1918E 601

N Y—McKennell v. Payne, 189 N Y S 7, 197 App Div 340.

Presumptions and burden of proof

(1) A settlement by a client of a claim in suit as to the attorney's right to fees will be presumed to have been made in good faith in the absence of a showing of fraudulent intent—Plummer v Great Northern R Co, 110 P 989, 60 Wash 214, 31 L R A (N S) 1315

(2) Accordingly the burden is on the client to justify his action in settling—Matter of Salant, 143 N Y S 870, 158 App Div 697, affirmed 104 N.E 1140, 210 N Y 622

(3) An attorney who claims the benefit of a lien on a judgment in bastardy has the burden of showing the fraudulent procurement of a release of the judgment—State v O'Brien, 109 S E 830, 89 W.Va 634

(4) In an action by an attorney to foreclose a lien on a settlement made by his client with the director general of railroads for damages for the death of her husband, the defendant must conclusively be presumed to have retained in his actual possession enough of the settlement fund to discharge the attorney's lien—McKennell v Payne, 189 N Y S 7, 197 App Div. 340.

(5) An attorney, in a suit to establish a lien on a payment direct to his client in a settlement, was held not to sustain the burden of proving that payment of the settlement followed notice of lien—Hemingway v. Adrian State Bank, of Adrian, Minn., 221 N.W. 920, 206 Iowa 1308

(6) In a suit by one of the regional counsel for the brotherhood of railway trainmen against a railroad company to enforce against respondent a lien, claimed under the attorneys' lien law, pursuant to a twenty per cent contingent fee contract with one of respondent's injured employees who was a member of the brotherhood and with whom respondent, without petitioner's consent or knowledge, made a settlement after suit for damages had been brought and after respondent had been served with the statutory notice of petitioner's lien, which lien suit was defended on the ground of unethical conduct on the part of petitioner in procuring his retainer, etc, it was held that respondent had the burden of proving its contention that the arrangement between the brotherhood and petitioner, whereby a twenty per cent contract was to net petitioner only fourteen per cent of the amount recovered and six per cent of such amount was to be remitted to the brotherhood to be applied on the costs of the brotherhood's investigation work in connection with injuries to its members, was a "fee-splitting device" and contrary to public policy—Ryan v Pennsylvania R Co, 268 Ill App 364

Admissibility of evidence

(1) On intervention to enforce an attorney's lien proof of settlement is admissible only to show acquittance to the extent of the client's interest—Donson v Alabama Fuel & Iron Co, 73 So 525, 198 Ala 383

(2) In attorney's action to enforce a lien for fees against defendant who settled a claim with the attorney's client which claim had been forwarded to attorney through a collection agency, admitting a law list showing fees to be charged was not error, where the list was used by the attorney and the agency in determining the fees to be paid, and was proof of an implied contract between attorney and his client—Stiles v. Cooter Gin Co, (Mo App.) 74 S W (2d) 1092.

(3) At the trial of an attorney's action for his fee of which he was deprived by collusive settlement with client, the attorney may introduce evidence establishing the merits of client's cause of action and the amount the attorney would have been entitled to receive, if the action had been prosecuted to judgment—Goldberg's Loan Office v Evans, 37 P (2d) 286, 169 Okl. 397.

(4) In an attorney's action to enforce his lien for compensation against a tort feasor who had settled with the attorney's client, evidence that the client had admitted the employment of attorney was held not inadmissible merely because admission was made before the contract of employment was signed—Illinois Cent. R Co. v. Moran, 14 S W (2d) 141, 227 Ky 820.

(5) In an attorney's action against a railroad for fraudulently and maliciously inducing plaintiffs' client in another action against railroad for false imprisonment to make an unauthorized settlement, in disregard of the attorney's lien, evidence of letters written from such client and his parents to plaintiffs, relative to the effect of incarceration upon him, was held to be immaterial and irrelevant—Downey v Northern Pac Ry Co, 232 P. 531, 72 Mont 166

(6) In attorney's action for being deprived of his lien, excluding evidence that attorney waived right to fee after being informed of impending settlement was held to be error—Wolf v Shulz Folding Box Co, (Mo App.) 44 S W.(2d) 866

(7) In proceedings by attorney to establish a lien claim against defendant, based on probable recovery had a case been tried instead of being compromised without such attorney's knowledge, the exclusion of evidence offered to establish a defense in the principal action, was held to be error.—Sterling Milk Products Co. v. Brown, 294 P. 117, 146 Okl. 302.

(8) In intervention proceedings by attorney for plaintiff to enforce his lien, exclusion of evidence offered to show intervener's solicitation of personal injury cases was held not an abuse of trial court's discretion—Holloway v. Dickinson, 163 N W 791, 137 Minn. 410, affirmed Dickinson v. Stiles, 38 S Ct. 415, 246 U.S 631, 62 L Ed 908, Ann Cas 1918E 601.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence

(1) Evidence was held to establish right of attorney for plaintiff in personal injury suit to lien against proceeds of settlement on the ground that plaintiff had ratified contract for services of attorney executed by plaintiff's wife and attorney had given notice of lien to defendant prior to settlement—Cohen v Kirchheimer, (Ill.App.) 2 N E (2d) 592.

(2) Testimony of client, settling case without attorneys' knowledge or consent and stipulating for nonpayment of attorney fees, was held not entitled to credibility—King v Chicago, R. & Q. R. Co., 235 Ill App 401.

eral rules are applicable in such proceedings to enforce lien. Further, as respects trial,[48] general rules are applicable in such proceedings to enforce lien.

(3) Evidence in a suit to enforce an attorney's lien against an adverse party who settled with a client without the consent of his attorney, was held not to show an improper solicitation of business by the attorney so as to defeat his lien—King v. Chicago, B & Q R Co, supra.

(4) In a suit by attorney under Rev L (1910) § 249, to recover the amount of a lien securing his fee against an adverse litigant who has compromised the action without notice to attorney, the evidence was held to be sufficient to sustain a judgment for such attorney.—Oklahoma Coal Co v. Hays, 176 P. 931, 71 Okl 248

(5) In proceedings by an attorney to recover fees secured by a lien it was held that evidence as to the value of an oil and gas lease was sufficient to support a judgment for such attorney for his contingent fee—Callahan v Cowley & Riddle, 245 P 48, 117 Okl. 58.

(6) Attorney who proved commencement of suit and indorsement of claim of attorney's lien on petition and compromise without his knowledge, made a prima facie case to establish a lien against defendant for amount contracted for, not to exceed one-third of sums paid in compromise—Sterling Milk Products Co. v. Brown, 294 P. 117, 146 Okl. 302.

(7) In an attorney's action to enforce a statutory lien, evidence was held to support a finding that defendants, who were adverse parties, did not effect a settlement or a compromise of particular litigation, precluding liability for attorneys' fees—Boulding v. Slick, 17 P.(2d) 391, 161 Okl 189

(8) In attorneys' suit against a client and an adverse party it was held that the evidence established that the attorneys were entitled to have a lien enforced on the ground client and adverse party compromised the litigation without notice to such attorneys—Bruce v. Anderson, 18 P (2d) 877, 161 Okl 248.

(9) Evidence established that attorney approved of and consented to a compromise and settlement of an action between client and adverse parties so that the adverse parties were not liable to attorney for fee for which he had lien—Mathews v Smith, 39 P.(2d) 48, 169 Okl 518.

(10) Evidence in a proceeding to enforce an attorney's lien after his client's consent to a discontinuance of the original action that plaintiff had contracted to give his attorney one-fourth of the amount recovered by the judgment, that the attorney had rendered services of value and importance in prosecuting the action, that plaintiff had also assigned other interests in the judgment to his creditors, subject to a sequestration in support of plaintiff's wife's claim for alimony, and that plaintiff thereafter signed a consent to discontinuance of the action, stating to one of his assignees his purpose was to defeat his attorney's right to any compensation, was held to show that the consent to discontinuance was in fraud of the rights of the attorney and of the assignees—Frear v Lewis, 195 N Y S 3, 201 App Div. 660

(11) In a servant's personal injury action against a railroad, in which there was a direct settlement and plaintiff's attorney intervened in order to enforce his lien the evidence was held not to require a finding that an amended complaint had been so framed as to set forth falsely the circumstances of the injury with intent to fabricate a cause of action—Miner v Payne, 184 N W 673, 150 Minn 103

(12) Evidence, in an intervention by plaintiff's attorney, after plaintiff's settlement with defendant without attorney's knowledge or payment of his fees, to have his right to a lien on cause of action and amount thereof determined, was held to be sufficient to sustain jury's finding that action was not procured by attorney by solicitation of a layman for hire—Anker v. Chicago Great Western Ry Co, 174 N W 841, 144 Minn 216

(13) On a petition by an attorney to intervene in order to enforce his lien in a suit settled without his consent, the evidence was held to establish that his contract with plaintiff was for the reasonable value of his services contingent on success—Schutt v Bush, 178 N W 48, 210 Mich 495

(14) In proceedings to enforce an attorney's lien in a suit attempted to be dismissed by a client, the evidence was held to sustain a finding as to the compensation clients had agreed to pay attorneys—Wild v Mehaffy, Donham & Mehaffy, 234 S W. 979, 149 Ark 670.

(15) Evidence supported judgment denying claim of proctor against defendants for fees, costs, and disbursements advanced to libelant based on contention that defendants settled case with libelant without knowledge of proctor to defraud proctor of his fees—The Golden Star, (C C A Cal) 82 F (2d) 687, affirming (D C) 9 F Supp 172.

Conduct of trial or hearing generally

Action to enforce attorney's lien, based on defendant's compromise of litigation with such attorney's client without notice to such attorney, is triable as an equity suit—Sterling Milk Products Co v. Brown, 294 P 117, 146 Okl 302

Reception of evidence

Offer of proof of attorneys' misconduct is improper on second hearing, where opportunity was had therefor at first hearing—King v Chicago, B & Q. R Co, 235 Ill. App 401.

Submission or refusal to submit issues

(1) In an attorneys' action against a railroad for fraudulently inducing a client in another action to make an unauthorized settlement, where there was evidence that such client was a minor at the time he employed plaintiffs, and had disaffirmed his contract before the settlement, the court did not err, in view of the conflict in evidence on the question of minority, in refusing to direct a verdict for defendant—Downey v Northern Pac. Ry. Co, 232 P. 531, 72 Mont 166

(2) In an attorney's action to enforce his lien for compensation against tort-feasor making a settlement with a client, refusal to submit the issue whether the attorney had solicited employment was not error—Illinois Cent. R Co v Moran, 14 S W (2d) 141, 227 Ky 830

(3) Similarly in attorney's action for such compensation against a tort-feasor settling with client, refusal to submit issue of attorney's employment was held not error—Illinois Cent R. Co. v Moran, supra.

Instructions held proper or improper

(1) In an attorney's action against a railroad for fraudulently inducing his client to make an unauthorized settlement the court did not err in giving an instruction based on Rev Codes (1921) § 8993 relative to an attorney's lien on his client's cause of action—Downey v Northern Pac Ry Co, 232 P 531, 72 Mont 166

(2) In attorney's action for being deprived of lien by defendants' settlement with client without attorney's consent, giving unnecessary instruction as to statutory attorney's lien, and erroneous instruction that attorney had five years from accrual of cause of action within which to institute suit thereon, whereas statute of limitations was not involved, was reversible error—Griffith v Walesby, (Mo App) 91 S W.(2d) 232

(3) Where defendant railroad, sued for fraudulently inducing plaintiffs' client in another action to make an unauthorized settlement, alleged

Further, as respects judgment or decree,[49] general rules are applicable in such proceedings to enforce lien. Further, as respects damages and amount of recovery,[50] general rules are applicable in such that the client was a minor when he employed plaintiffs and had disaffirmed the contract of employment before making a settlement, an instruction permitting plaintiffs to recover the reasonable value of services rendered, notwithstanding the defense of minority, was improper—Downey v. Northern Pac. Ry Co, supra

(4) In attorney's action for being deprived of lien by defendants' settlement with client without attorney's consent, instruction reciting statute giving attorney's lien should not have been given where the jury was clearly and fully instructed upon the question of abandonment and waiver of lien—Griffith v. Walesby, supra

Questions for jury

(1) In proceeding by an attorney to enforce a lien for fee in personal injury action, the question of whether the client signed the alleged contract with the attorney was held to be for the jury—Buckeye Cotton Oil Co v. Winn, 229 S.W. 734, 148 Ark 654.

(2) In a proceeding in intervention by attorney under Crawford & M Dig § 628, to enforce an attorney's lien, it was held that whether the client, plaintiff in the action, approved or ratified its institution, and whether the attorney was negligent in failing to prosecute the client's claim with proper diligence so as to justify his discharge, were questions for the jury—Johnson v Missouri Pac R. Co., 233 S W. 699, 149 Ark 413.

(3) In an attorney's action for compensation against a tort-feasor who made a settlement with the attorney's client in disregard of the attorney's lien, the question of attorney's discharge before tort-feasor's settlement with client was held to be for the jury—Illinois Cent. R Co v. Moran, 14 S W.(2d) 141, 227 Ky 820.

(4) Whether an implied contract of employment existed between attorney and client placing his claim in the hands of a collection agency which forwarded the claim to the attorney so as to permit attorney to recover fees from defendant settling with client or collection agency direct was held to be for the jury.—Stiles v. Cooter Gin Co., (Mo App) 74 S W.(2d) 1092.

(5) Any competent evidence of arrangement between client and adverse party defeating client's right creates jury question of compromise, as respects attorney's right to fee and lien therefor.—Western States Oil & Land Co. v. Helms, 288 P 964, 148 Okl. 206, 72 A.L.R. 357.

Judgment outside issues

In an action by an attorney to recover the amount of a lien to the value of an undivided one-half interest of land, and based on the theory that the adverse party to an action settled the same without giving the attorney an opportunity to be present, not alleging any damage from exclusion from possession, judgment for one-half the rental value was without the issues and erroneous—Allen v Shepherd, 169 P. 1115, 69 Okl 47.

Entry of judgment for attorney of record and assistant held not error

In proceedings under Gen St (1913) § 4955, to enforce attorney's lien, after settlement of an action it was held that an entry of judgment for attorney of record and counsel assisting him was not error, where the attorney of record joined his assistant with him in the motion papers, and the amount recovered did not exceed the agreed fee—Georgian v Minneapolis & St L. R Co, 154 N W 962, 131 Minn 102

Decree against insurer unauthorized

In a suit to enforce an attorneys' lien against an automobile insurance company and its insured, which had settled a personal injury suit against the insured with complainant attorney's client, without the attorney's knowledge, after service of notice of lien upon them, a decree against the insurer was not justified where there was nothing in the record showing the terms of the policy, nor anything to show upon what the liability of the insurer was predicated except the bare fact that it had conducted the proceedings which resulted in a settlement, and there being nothing to justify the decree against the insurer, a joint decree against the insured and insurer could not stand, although there was sufficient evidence in the record to justify a decree against the insured alone—Berkemeier v Dornbralt Motor Sales, 263 Ill App 211.

Measured by settlement or contract of employment

(1) Where a settlement has been entered into in disregard of an attorney's lien the measure of the attorney's recovery on his lien as against the settling defendant is ordinarily the attorney's contractual percentage of the compromise sum actually received by the litigant, regardless of a contract to the effect that the attorney is to receive a certain part of the judgment as his compensation

(2) This is particularly so where the settlement of an action by client, without knowledge or consent of attorneys having contract for contingent fee, is reasonable, the amount paid in the settlement must be taken as basis upon which to compute amount of attorneys' lien—Downey v Northern Pac Ry Co, 233 P 531, 72 Mont. 166.

(3) Accordingly under a contingent fee contract whereby an attorney was to receive one half, or an equivalent percentage, of the amount recovered, the measure of his recovery on settlement of the original action by the parties in disregard of his lien is one half of the amount of settlement.

(4) Hence under L (1909) p 97 defendant, having notice of attorney's contract for one half the damages recovered, and of his claim of lien, and who thereafter settled with the client for one hundred sixty dollars, was liable to pay one half the amount over again to the attorney—Case v Emerson-Brantingham Co., 109 N E 671, 269 Ill. 94.

(5) Plaintiffs' contract being on a fifty per cent. basis, where defendant settled with plaintiffs' client without plaintiffs' knowledge, paying client four thousand dollars and agreeing to pay attorney's fees, plaintiffs are not limited to fifty per cent. of four thousand dollars—Mytton v New York, C & St. L R Co, (Mo App) 198 S W 189

(6) Where attorneys were employed on terms they should have half of amount recovered or saved to the client, after settlement attorneys were entitled to lien against land which was proceeds of litigation for half its value, less amount of incumbrance, and additional judgment for half of the client's account to defendant, payment of which had been saved the client by settlement—Bogle & Sharp v. Walker, 202 S W 478, 133 Ark 294.

(7) Where attorney for plaintiff had a contract for percentage of recovery by suit or compromise and served notice on defendant of his lien, and action was dismissed and second suit commenced by another attorney which plaintiff settled the settlement prima facie established the amount due to the first attorney from defendant—Carter v. Dunham, 177 P. 533, 104 Kan 59

(8) Under attorney's lien statute, where value of land, proceeds of settlement of litigation, was two thousand five hundred fifty-five dollars and twenty cents, subject to a mortgage for one thousand two hundred fifty dollars, leaving a net recovery of one thousand three hundred five dollars and twenty cents the attorneys who negotiated the settlement had a lien against the land for one half of such net recovery pursuant to their contract with the client—Bogle & Sharp v Walker, supra

(9) In case of settlement after judgment, without any intent on the part of the client to defraud his attorney, the attorney is held to be entitled to a lien for the agreed percentage of the settlement only—Machcinski v Lehigh Valley R Co, (C C A N Y) 272 F. 920

(10) However, there are cases which hold that after settlement without the consent of an attorney he may enforce his lien for the full amount specified in the contract of employment—Alabama Produce Co v. Smith, 150 So 148, 227 Ala 330—Caruso v Pelling, 271 Ill App 318.

(11) In accordance with such view it is held that where an attorney has perfected a lien for fees and is prevented from performing duties for which he was employed by a compromise between his client and the adverse party, without notice to the attorney, the measure of his compensation in an action against the client is the compensation named in the contract of employment notwithstanding such contract was for a contingent fee—Callahan v Cowley & Riddle, 245 P. 48, 117 Okl. 58

(12) Where before the time of settlement the client's adversary had notice of an express contract between the client and his attorney he may be entitled to a lien for the amount specified in such contract—Jacobs v United Electric Rys. Co, 125 A 286, 46 R.I. 230.

(13) On intervention by plaintiff's attorney to enforce his lien on the suit given by Code (1907) § 3011, after the parties had made a settlement, the damages are to be estimated as though there had been no settlement—Alabama Fuel & Iron Co. v. Denson, 94 So. 311, 208 Ala. 337.

(14) In an intervening petition by an attorney against a client who was one of the parties to the principal proceeding and who had agreed to a compromise of the controversy without the knowledge or consent of the attorney, to determine whether the attorney should be paid for his services in conformity with his express contract or be paid such other sum as might be found to be the reasonable value of his services, and to have a lien declared, the express contract was controlling, and such attorney was therefore entitled to one-third of the net amount to be received upon the consummation of said proposed settlement and no more—Barnes v. Barnes, 225 Ill App 68

(15) At any rate an attorneys' lien statute giving a lien on a client's cause of action does not authorize an attorney to recover a sum in excess of the amount for which such cause of action is compromised by a client—Levy v Public Service Ry Co, 103 A 171, 91 N J Law 183, affirming 98 A. 847

Recovery not limited by arrangement between attorney and labor organization

In a suit by one of the regional counsel for the brotherhood of railway trainmen against a railroad company to enforce against respondent a lien, claimed under the attorneys' lien law, pursuant to a twenty per cent contingent fee contract with one of respondent's injured employees who was a member of the brotherhood and with whom respondent, without petitioner's consent or knowledge, made a settlement after suit for damages had been brought and after respondent had been served with the statutory notice of petitioner's lien, it was held that, notwithstanding the arrangement between the brotherhood and petitioner whereby a twenty per cent. contract was to net petitioner only fourteen per cent. of the amount recovered and six per cent. of such amount was to be remitted to the brotherhood to be applied on the costs of the brotherhood's investigation work in connection with injuries to its members, which arrangement was known and agreed to by petitioner's client and was valid, petitioner was not limited in the amount of his recovery against respondent to fourteen per cent. of the sum for which respondent settled with petitioner's client, but was entitled to recover the full twenty per cent. of such sum—Ryan v. Pennsylvania R Co, 268 Ill App. 364.

One of several attorneys entitled only to proportionate share

Where respondents in a condemnation case brought by a railroad company had two attorneys, and, on the abandonment of the case and the consequent allowance of attorneys' fees by the court to such respondents, a petition for a lien on the fund was filed by one of such attorneys, and where both attorneys had appeared in court and stated that they had agreed with the railroad attorneys that a stated sum was a reasonable sum to be paid to the respondents to reimburse them for attorneys' fees, the lien petitioner was estopped from claiming more of such fund than his proportionate share of it, considering the fees earned or services rendered by both counsel, although the other attorney was not a party in the appellate court—Chicago Junction Ry. Co. v. Leitch, 215 Ill App 67.

Where amount of settlement not disclosed

Although the amount for which a suit was settled by client and defendant was not disclosed, the attorneys were entitled to nominal damages against defendant for deforcement of lien—Noell v Chicago & E I Ry. Co, (Mo App) 21 S W (2d) 937, certiorari denied Chicago & E I Ry Co v Noell, 50 S Ct. 465, 281 U S. 766, 74 L Ed. 1174.

Disbursements and costs not recoverable

Where attorneys for a widow, whose husband had been killed by a railroad, had an agreement with her for payment of a sum equal to fifty per cent. of any recovery, either by judgment or settlement, with disbursements and taxable costs, and a new administratrix, substituted for the widow, in settlement with the railroad, did not recover disbursements and costs, the attorneys may not recover them from the railroad in an action to enforce their lien on the settlement.—Leary v. Sanzone, 180 N.Y S 149.

§ 232. Protection against Set-Off between Parties

a. In general
b Judgment against judgment
c Assignment of judgment

a. In General

That an attorney's lien is entitled to protection against a set-off by his client's adversary has been both affirmed and denied

According to one line of authority an attorney's charging lien is superior to the rights of the adverse party under the statute of set-off,[52] while according to another line of authority such lien is subject to the right of the opposing party to a set-off [53] At all events an attorney's lien will not be suspended for the purpose of allowing the adverse party to put his unliquidated demand in shape for a set-off.[54]

Set-off acquired after lien attaches. The attorney's lien will prevail over a set-off acquired by the adverse party after the lien attached [55]

b. Judgment against Judgment

An attorney's lien is superior to the right of the parties to set off judgments recovered by them respectively, except as noted hereunder.

Except where the right of setting off one judgment against another is authorized under the terms of an applicable statute,[56] it is well settled that an attorney's lien is superior to the right of the parties to set off judgments recovered by them respectively against each other in different actions.[57] The same rule prevails where the judgments are rendered by

Deduction of expenditures by defendant

Dismissal

Appeal by attorney for employee in a proceeding under Workmen's Compensation Act from an order denying a vacation of a satisfaction of judgment was held not dismissible because the attorney was not a party to the original action, where the attorney whose fees had not been paid was sufficiently identified with the litigation to appeal to protect his lien—Renfro v Nixon, (Idaho) 45 P (2d) 595

Reversal and grounds thereof

(1) Where an attorney made application in a suit pending in the district court for allowance for his attorney's fees, and for a lien adjudged against a judgment procured by him as attorney for plaintiff, and the evidence clearly showed that such attorney had performed services for plaintiff, that they were reasonably worth not less than a certain sum, nor more than a named sum, and the services were reasonably worth the amount claimed, and the attorney had filed notice of his lien in the cause, and that he was entitled to have the amount of the attorney's fee ordered paid out of the judgment, and the trial court rendered judgment denying such attorney's fee, it was held that the judgment was without any evidence to support it, and should be reversed and remanded, with directions to fix the amount of the attorney's fee and order it paid out of the judgment—Estes v Hartshorne, 214 P. 698, 90 Okl 40

(2) Where, on the hearing of a petition for an attorney's lien on the fund which had been deposited in a condemnation proceeding upon the abandonment of the proceeding, as attorney's fees for the respondents, the finding for petitioner was reversed because the record showed that the allowance included items not rendered "on account of" the condemnation proceedings, and it did not appear what those charges amounted to—Chicago Junction Ry Co v. Reasons for rule

(1) One reason for the rule stated in the text is that if the set-off were allowed the judgment to which the lien has attached would thereby be destroyed—Webb v. Parker, 114 N. Y S 439, 130 App.Div. 92.

(2) Attorneys' lien on a judgment different courts in the same action.[58] So the right to a lien which as the statutes usually say cannot be affected by any settlement between the parties before or after the judgment is superior to the right of the parties to agree to set off one judgment or award against another when the effect of such a set-off will be to prevent the entry of a judgment to which the lien might attach.[59] But where the several judgments asked to be set off against each other were entered in the same action, the equities of the parties are superior to the lien of the attorney[60] which attaches only to the clear balance due to his client after all the equities arising out of that particular litigation are settled.[61] Similarly the right of set-off, when the judgments sought to be set off are rendered in actions growing out of the same subject matter, is superior to the right of an attorney under his lien.[62] Where an attorney agrees not to assert a lien, in case a judgment of the adverse party is set off against a judgment entered for the client of such attorney, he shall not, of course, be permitted to assert a lien in violation of such agreement.[63]

Pending appeal. One judgment cannot be set off against another, pending an appeal from either, until the rights of the parties are fixed, and the judgment becomes final.[64]

Discretion of court. Even though a set-off may obtained for services rendered was also held to be superior to the right of a judgment debtor to set off another judgment obtained against the judgment creditor since the right to set off judgments rests on equitable principles, which right will be allowed only to promote justice.—Cherry v. Erwin & Erwin, (Okl.) 49 P.(2d) 788

One action in contract and one in tort

Judgments may not be set off to the exclusion of prior attorney's lien, where one action was on contract and other in tort.—Johnson v. Johnston, 254 P. 494, 123 Okl. 203.

Filing notice prior to entry setting aside judgment

An attorney filing notice of his lien prior to the entry of an order setting off his client's judgment against the judgment debtor's judgment against such attorney's client was held to be entitled to have such lien protected.—Spokane Sec Finance Co v. Bevan, 20 P.(2d) 31, 172 Wash 418.

Lien under contingent fee contracts

The lien of attorneys, under a contract giving them a percentage of any amount that might be recovered for prosecuting an unliquidated claim, was superior to the right of defendant to set off judgments obtained by him against plaintiff after the making of such contract.—Dankwardt v. Kermode, 187 P. 519, 68 Colo. 225

Prior existence of claim as imparting priority

The fact that plaintiff's judgment against defendant was founded on debt which antedated defendant's judgment against plaintiff did not impart to it priority over attorney's lien on defendant's judgment, mere existence of plaintiff's claim giving him no such right, it not being available under Code (1923) § 10175, whatever remedy he may have had in equity on proper showing.—Ex parte Cooper, 103 So. 474, 212 Ala. 501

Fact that plaintiff's judgment against defendant was founded on debt included in defendant's judgment against plaintiff did not impart to it priority over attorney's lien on judgment, status of plaintiff's judgment not being improved by the fact that a debt claim on which it was founded bore some relation to a detinue suit in which a lien judgment was recovered against him.—Ex parte Cooper, 103 So. 474, 212 Ala. 501 legally be made, yet if in the exercise of its discretion the court can see that an injustice will be done by granting the set-off, it will be refused.[65]

c. Assignment of Judgment

A client's assignment of a judgment to his attorney will defeat a subsequently attempted set-off by the adverse party but where a set-off existed at the time of assignment the rule is otherwise.

An assignment of a judgment by a client to his attorney prior to an attempt at set-off made by the adverse party will defeat such set-off.[66] It is otherwise, however, as to a set-off which existed at the time of the assignment.[67]

§ 233. Enforcement of Retaining Lien

Generally a retaining lien cannot be actively enforced, although, under circumstances noted hereunder, such lien may be enforced as an incident to a proceeding brought for another purpose.

Since as noted in § 225 supra, the rights of an attorney with respect to the subject matter of a general or retaining lien is merely the passive right to hold such subject matter until his claim is satisfied, a retaining lien cannot be actively enforced.[68] More specifically a general or retaining lien cannot be enforced by judicial proceedings brought for that purpose,[69] nor may an attorney who has a lien on the papers of his client sell said papers under process to foreclose his lien, as may a pledgee or a mortgagee in other cases.[70] On the other hand where the attorney is brought into court, upon application of his client, to compel the attorney to turn over money or papers upon which he claims a lien,[71] or in a suit by the attorney to recover his compensation,[72] the court may ascertain the extent of the lien and enforce it. Moreover, if such suit is not brought by the attorney within a time limited, or is not then diligently prosecuted, the court may order the papers to be given up.[73] However, except by consent the question in dispute cannot be determined by the court in a summary way.[74]

Statute inapplicable

The Attorney's Lien Act of 1909 was not intended to apply to the establishment of attorney's liens upon papers or securities belonging to their clients which come into their possession in the ordinary course of business.—Needham v. Voliva, 191 Ill. App. 256.

Complaint insufficient in action to fix lien

(1) A common-law lien of an attorney employed to collect an indebtedness was on the evidence of indebtedness in the hands of the attorney, and not on the debt itself, and hence, in an action in equity by an attorney against his client to have his lien fixed on proceeds of insurance policy, the complaint did not state facts which would confer a lien, where it did not allege that the policy or other evidence, if any, was in the possession of the attorney.—Cosby v. Hurst, 231 S.W. 194, 149 Ark. 11.

(2) Further an amendment to the complaint alleging that defendant delivered to plaintiff, and the latter still had in his possession, all of the papers, proof, etc., necessary in the settlement of the claim, was insufficient, as not alleging possession of the policy, there being no lien on proofs of death and papers of that character, as such papers do not evidence the debt sought to be enforced.—Hurst v. Cosby, 242 S.W. 570, 154 Ark. 300.

Adjudication in absence of appropriate pleadings

Adjudication of attorney's retaining or possessory lien for expenses incurred and fees due him, where issues involved were not raised by appropriate pleadings, was held to be erroneous.—Burns v. Pratt, 31 P.(2d) 106, 167 Okl. 546

§ 234. Enforcement of Charging Lien

a In general
b Who may enforce and against whom enforced
c Defenses

a. In General

In accordance with its peculiar nature, an attorney's charging lien may be enforced by peculiar methods.

Not only is an attorney's charging lien peculiar, as has been noticed in § 211 supra, but such lien is to be enforced by peculiar methods.[75] However, attorneys may not be permitted to enforce collection of a charging lien by withholding the papers of a client in violation of a contract of retainer,[76] nor may an attorney enforce a lien by action or a note or other obligation to pay.[77] At any rate, an application to establish a lien may not operate in such manner as to require the payment of an additional amount of attorney's fees.[78] Moreover, an attorneys' lien statute does not authorize the enforcing of a lien for a sum in excess of the total value of the claim that is made the subject of the lien.[79]

Solvency of client. The enforcement of a charging lien is not affected by the solvency of a client.[80]

Collection of judgment Since, as previously noted in § 211, ordinarily, the attorney is regarded as an equitable assignee of the judgment to the extent of his lien, it is proper practice, to enforce such lien, for the attorney to proceed to the collection of the judgment to the extent of his lien in the name of the client,[81] and for this purpose it has been held that the attorney has the same power over the

Lien for services in particular action or special proceedings

(1) A proceeding to enforce an attorney's lien is confined to the lien for services in a particular action or a special proceeding in which the lien is claimed —In re Dutcher Bros, 268 N.Y.S 149, 241 App Div. 793

(2) Accordingly, attorneys for the wife in a separation action against the husband were not entitled to file a petition in an action to enforce a lien for services rendered in an extrajudicial proceeding or informal arbitration involving property rights or for services rendered in matters wholly unconnected with the separation action—In re Dutcher Bros, supra

(3) Further, where attorneys for a wife in a separation action made no claim for services and the judgment in such action had no pecuniary value, the separation action was held to afford no basis for a proceeding by the attorneys to enforce a lien for services rendered in a collateral matter.—In re Dutcher Bros, supra.

judgment and execution that the client himself has [82]

Appeal. In some jurisdictions an attorney has the right to appeal from a judgment against his client in order to obtain a more favorable judgment and a chance to enforce his lien [83] On the other hand, it has been held that an attorney may not prosecute an appeal for the purpose of reversing a verdict or judgment and so obtaining a lien,[84] at least against the consent of his client [85] His proper remedy is with the court below [86] If, however, the client is insolvent, or acts fraudulently or in bad faith, or, without sufficient reason, refuses to apply for compensation for his attorney, the latter may apply to the court to be allowed to proceed in his own right and in his own name or in the name of his client, for compensation out of a fund in court; and, in such a case, the attorney may appeal if unsuccessful [87]

b. Who May Enforce and against Whom Enforced

In the absence of a statute providing otherwise, an attorney's charging lien can be enforced only by the attorney or his assignee. The charging lien may be enforced against the judgment debtor, his assignee, or both, against an associate attorney, or against his client's adversary litigant, as the case may be.

In the absence of statute otherwise providing, an attorney's charging lien can be enforced only by the attorney,[88] or his assignee.[89] The client cannot institute the proceeding on behalf of his attorney,[90] but, under an appropriate statute, an attorney's charging lien may be determined and enforced by the court on the petition of either the attorney or the client.[91]

Against whom enforced. An attorney may enforce his charging lien against the judgment debtor,[92] or his assignee,[93] or both [94] He may, likewise, in a proper case, enforce the lien against an associate attorney,[95] or against defendant in the litigation in which professional services were rendered as the basis of the lien [96] It has been held that the attorney cannot compel the adverse party to pay him until he has exhausted his remedy against his client, or has

on the judgment—Application of H C Roberts Electric Supply Co, 236 N Y S 211, 131 Misc. 119—6 C J p 796 note 17

(3) Thus, a substituted attorney may, under applicable statutory provisions, enforce his lien for services by execution, on refusal of the petitioner for substitution of attorneys to discharge the lien—Application of H C Roberts Electric Supply Co, supra

(3) Execution, however, may not be had, it would seem, without first obtaining leave of court—McDonald v Napier, 14 Ga. 89—6 C J. p 796 note 18

(4) Moreover, such leave will not be granted unless it appears to be necessary to the protection of the attorney's claims—Publishers' Printing Co v. Gillin Printing Co, 38 N Y S 784, 16 Misc 558
6 C J p 796 note 19

Supplementary proceedings

(1) The attorney may be permitted to maintain supplementary proceedings on the judgment for the purpose of enforcing his lien—Merchant v Sessions, 5 N Y Civ Proc 24

(2) He may, however, be required first to obtain leave of court—Moore v Taylor, 2 How Pr N S (N Y) 313, affirmed 40 Hun 56
6 C J p 796 note 21

Provisional remedies and securities

(1) The attorney may, likewise, enforce all provisional remedies and securities given after the commencement of the action for the enforcement of judgment—Newbert v Cunningham, 50 Me 231, 79 Am D 612—6 C.J. p 796 note 22

(2) Thus, he may maintain an action in his client's name on a bail bond, appeal bond, replevin bond, or other securities given in the cause—Heavenrich v Kelley, 69 N W 226, 111 Mich 163—6 C J p 796 note 23

(3) Moreover, where the client has become bankrupt, an attorney's charging lien may be enforced by a petition in bankruptcy proceedings—In re Wilson, (D C N Y) 12 F 235

Court order requiring payment to clerk

Where plaintiff in a divorce action did not intend to compensate her attorney, although in law obligated to do so, and the attorney under statute had a lien on the judgment and proceeds thereof, his procurement of a court order without knowledge or consent of plaintiff requiring defendant to pay alimony into the clerk's office, and permitting plaintiff or the attorney of record to withdraw it, was justified in aid of his lien—Hampton v Hampton, 39 P (2d) 703, 85 Utah 338

Order staying collection of judgment

Attorneys claiming a lien against a judgment could not have an order staying the proceedings looking to the collection of the client's judgment reversed, where the lien was unadjudicated—Keyes v Ahrenstedt, 1 P (2d) 843, 164 Wash 106 shown that he is insolvent and that it would be useless to pursue his claim against him,[97] but it has been held, also, that the attorney may proceed immediately against both without first exhausting his remedy against the client.[98]

c. Defenses

An action to enforce an attorneys' charging lien is open to any defense which tends to defeat such lien.

An action to enforce an attorney's charging lien is open to any defense tending to show that no lien ever existed, or that if it once existed it was discharged with the consent of plaintiff, or was waived or forfeited by his misconduct or neglect.[99] Thus, it may be shown in defense that the attorney had no authority to institute the suit claimed to give rise to the lien,[1] or that he acted under a void contract of employment;[2] but, in a proceeding to enforce an attorney's lien on a judgment, neither the judgment debtor nor an assignee of the judgment can impeach it for lack of authority on the part of the attorney to prosecute the action in which the judgment was rendered.[3]

In proceeding against sheriff. Where an attorney is permitted to enforce his lien by proceeding summarily against a sheriff who has collected money on execution, a settlement between the parties is a good defense to the sheriff,[4] unless the attorney sets up notice.[5]

§ 235. —— Summary Proceedings

The right of an attorney to enforce his lien by summary proceedings is acknowledged by some authorities, but denied by others.

Until a judgment is fully executed, it is ordinarily held that the court retains jurisdiction of the subject matter and the parties for the purpose of hearing any motion affecting such judgment, and that if the attorney desires to have his lien established and declared against such judgment he may apply to the court for that purpose.[6] There are, however, cases which hold that summary remedies are not available

Equitable defenses
Where an attorney's proceeding to enforce a lien is regarded as a special proceeding, it has been held that the party proceeded against may interpose any defense available in an equitable action.—In re Schneller, 240 N.Y.S 440, 136 Misc. 84, affirmed Schneller v Rogers, 243 N.Y.S. 875, 230 App Div. 710

Set-off
Where a decree for plaintiff was reduced on defendant's appeal, and defendant was decreed costs, whereupon defendant's counsel asserted a lien on the decree for costs, took an assignment from defendant, and had execution issued, plaintiff could not set off the execution for the amount of the decree in his favor against that part of the attorney's execution due the attorney for his taxable fees and disbursements, but could set off his execution against any remaining part of the attorney's execution.—Fraam v Kelley, 256 N.W 552, 268 Mich 573.

(2) The summary proceeding thus authorized is applicable only to disputes between attorney and client If the attorney seeks to enforce his lien against a third party, except when the amount due is beyond dispute, he must proceed to foreclose his lien otherwise.—Matter of Salant, 143 N.Y.S 870, 158 App Div 697, affirmed 104 N.E 1140, 210 N.Y. 632—6 C.J. p 795 note 95.

Notice and opportunity to be heard
(1) Enforcement of an attorney's lien by motion in the original action, requires notice and an opportunity to be heard.—Johnston v. Stephens, 266 S.W. 881, 206 Ky. 83

(2) Accordingly, where an attorney enforces his lien by motion in the original action after proper notice, a judgment without pleadings, summons, or entrance of appearance is in rem only and will not authorize an execution.—Johnston v. Stephens, supra.

Noting of record
In cases where attorneys are entitled to a lien on the recovery, that fact may on motion be noted of record.—Johnston v. Stephens, 266 S.W. 881, 206 Ky. 83.

Application for substitution of attorneys
Where a party to an action makes an application to have his attorneys to an attorney for the enforcement of his lien.[7] At any rate, summary remedies provided by statute for the enforcement of attorneys' liens are available in only such cases as properly fall within the terms of the particular statute[8]

Against associate counsel. Where a lien exists in favor of associate counsel it is held that such lien may be enforced by motion against money collected by a coattorney.[9]

Against sheriff. An attorney may proceed summarily against a sheriff who has collected money on the execution.[10]

Against specific fund. If there is a specific fund, an attorney may, by motion and order, get that set apart to satisfy his lien,[11] and in a proper case may be entitled to an injunction pendente lite with respect to such fund.[12]

Taking judgment by default. Where defendant is in default for want of an answer, plaintiff's attorney has the right to enter judgment for the amount claimed and to enforce it to the extent of his lien[13]

Intervention in proceedings to revive judgment. An attorney at law, having a lien on a judgment, may intervene in proceedings to revive such judgment, and is entitled to a reviver thereof in his own name to the extent of his lien[14]

§ 236. —— Independent Action

An attorney may be permitted to enforce his lien by an independent action.

It has been held that an attorney's lien on a judgment or the proceeds thereof may be enforced by him by an original suit in equity in his own name[15]

Availability of remedy under particular subdivisions

Under Gen.St.(1913) § 4955, as amended by L.(1917) c 98 § 1 (Gen St Suppl [1917] § 4955), where an attorney claims a lien under subd 1 or 2, on money or property of his client in his possession and control, and corresponding to the retaining lien at common law, he cannot resort to the summary proceedings furnished by subd 6, for the enforcement of charging liens arising under subds. 3, 4, 5.—Westerlund v Peterson, 197 N.W. 110, 157 Minn 379

Where there had been a settlement between an attorney and a client, the former retaining from the moneys of the client with the latter's consent the amount of his fee, the attorney cannot thereafter force the client into court by the summary proceedings, under Gen St (1913) § 4955, as amended by L (1917) c 98 § 1 (Gen St Supp [1917] § 4955), for the enforcement of attorney's liens to have the settlement confirmed or the amount of his fee determined anew by the court—Westerlund v Peterson, 197 N.W 110, 157 Minn 379

Statute applicable only to disputes between attorney and client

Summary proceeding to determine the amount of an attorney's lien, under Judiciary L § 475, cannot be maintained against a party other than the client, except when the amount due is beyond dispute, such statute being applicable only to disputes between attorney and client—Maier v Maze Realty Co, 178 N.Y.S 502, 189 App.Div 339.

(2) Also, the default will not be opened unless it appears that there was no fraud or collusion between the parties and that the attorney's lien is not necessary for his protection—Publishers' Printing Co v Gillin Printing Co, 38 N.Y.S 784, 16 Misc 558

Necessity for fixing amount of fee

The amount of an attorney's fee must be fixed, either by agreement between the parties or by action at law, before the lien therefor can be enforced by equitable proceedings under N.Y.Judiciary L § 475—Machcinski v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., (C.C.A.N.Y.) 272 F 920

On payment to garnishing creditors of client

Attorneys who, under Comp.L (1917) § 346, had a lien on a judgment recovered for their client, may, the judgment debtor having paid the amount thereof to garnishing creditors of their client, enforce their lien by an independent action, and are not restricted to intervention in the original action—Lundy v Cappuccio, 181 P. 165, 54 Utah 420.

Moreover, where statutes provide a remedy for the enforcement of attorneys' charging liens, it has been held that they may be enforced either by the statutory proceedings or by a suit in equity.[16] On the other hand, where an attorney has an ample remedy in the original suit, he may not be permitted to assert his lien in an independent suit.[17] At any rate, an attorney who claims an interest in a certain fund for his services in procuring the same is not entitled to enjoin an act which does not affect his rights.[18] Where the amount of a decree is paid into the registry of the court, it has been held that the more orderly procedure by an attorney to enforce a lien thereon is by a petition to the chancellor instead of by an original bill.[19] A remedy provided by statute by means of a petition is not, on the other hand, exclusive, but cumulative, for a court of equity always has power to ascertain and enforce liens.[20]

§ 237. —— Action on Judgment

Attorneys have been permitted to enforce their liens by bringing an action on the judgments recovered by their efforts.

An attorney may maintain an action on the judgment in the name of his client for the purpose of enforcing his lien,[21] but not, it has been held, without the client's consent.[22] It has been held, also, that a judgment for costs only belongs entirely to the attorney as equitable assignee.[23]

a. In General

Where the procedure is not specified by statute, proceedings for the enforcement of attorneys' liens should follow the practice of the court wherein such proceedings are brought.

Where an attorneys' lien statute does not specify the procedure for the enforcement of such lien, the practice of the court wherein the proceeding is had should be followed.[24]

Determination of amount due. While it is not necessary to the existence of the lien that the amount due the attorney should be liquidated, yet the exact amount of the claim should be determined before the lien can be enforced.[25]

Y S 211, 131 Misc. 119.

How determined

(1) Ordinarily, the amount of the attorney's fee and the question as to how much has been paid by the client thereon cannot be determined summarily on motion and affidavits, but should be ascertained on a reference—Corbit v. Watson, 85 N Y S 125, 88 App Div. 467—6 C J. p 795 note 97.

(2) However, while the court may refer the matter to a referee to take evidence, or even an account, and to report the same with his opinion to assist the court in deciding the questions arising, it cannot delegate the entire matter to the referee for final determination—Sullivan v McCann, 108 N Y S. 909, 124 App Div 126—Matter of Edward Ney Co, 99 N Y S 982, 114 App Div. 467.

b. Nature, Form, and Scope

Proceedings to enforce attorneys' charging liens have been held to be proceedings in rem and special proceedings and have also been held to open for adjudication the whole extent and character of the lien in question.

Proceedings to enforce attorneys' charging liens have been held to be proceedings in rem.[26] Moreover, proceedings for the enforcement of such liens have been held to be special proceedings.[27] Other cases have held that proceedings provided for by statute for the enforcement of attorneys' liens are statutory as distinguished from equitable proceedings.[28] On the other hand proceedings brought by attorneys as preliminary to the enforcement of their lien have been held to be equitable.[29] At any rate, the whole extent and character of an attorney's lien may be open for adjudication in proceedings to enforce such liens;[30] but a client who would otherwise be entitled to a trial by jury cannot be deprived of such right by his attorney's proceedings to impress a lien on certain property.[31] Further, on proceedings to set aside satisfaction of a judgment to the extent of an attorney's lien, the court cannot determine the amount for which such judgment shall be restored.[32]

c. Time to Sue

Proceedings to enforce attorneys' charging liens must not be premature but may be brought at any time within the statutory period of limitations.

A proceeding to enforce an attorney's charging lien must not be brought prematurely.[33] Such lien may, however, be enforced at any time within the period prescribed by applicable statutes of limitations.[34]

(3) Moreover where a reference is authorized to determine the amount due under an agreement, the referee cannot ignore the agreement and ascertain the amount due on a quantum meruit—In re Public Works Dept., 60 N.E. 781, 167 N.Y. 501 modifying 60 N.Y.S. 413, 58 App.Div. 459.

Suit by attorneys to fix the amount due from a client as a lien on a fund possessed by a third party was held to be an equitable action—Hyers v. Western & Southern Life Ins. Co., 169 N.E. 577, 33 Ohio App. 331.

30. Bloom v. Irving Trust Co., 272 N.Y.S. 637, 152 Misc. 50.

Under particular order

An order reversing special term's order giving a discharged attorney a lien on any settlement or judgment to the extent of twenty-five per cent. thereof, with directions to determine the value of such attorney's services and to fix the amount of his lien, was held not to limit the special term solely to a consideration of the reasonable value of the attorney's services, but the order of substitution remained, leaving the extent and the character of the attorney's lien open for adjudication—Bloom v. Irving Trust Co., 272 N.Y.S. 637, 152 Misc. 50.

Determination of amount due attorney

(1) Ascertainment as to the amount due complainants was within a prayer for general relief in a suit by attorneys prosecuting a lien claim against the United States under contracts for a percentage of the award to establish their lien—McGowan v. Parish, 35 S.Ct. 543, 237 U.S. 285, 59 L.Ed. 955, reversing Parish v. McGowan, 39 App.D.C. 184.

(2) An attorney was held to be entitled to have the amount of his lien determined in a special proceeding, where a substitution of attorneys had been attempted in the main action—McNally v. Youngs, 262 N.Y.S. 838, 237 App.Div. 787, appeal dismissed, 188 N.E. 49, 262 N.Y. 526.

Limitation to ground of recovery pleaded

Where an attorney, having a lien on a judgment recovered for his client, sought to enforce such lien by an action against the judgment debtor, and merely alleged his lien as the basis for recovery, he was bound thereby and limited, in right of recovery, to the ground pleaded—Fornoff v. Smith, 231 Ill.App. 232.

31. In re Sebring, 264 N.Y.S. 379, 238 App.Div. 281.

Right to retain check

An attorney's right to recover possession of a check which his client obtained from him could not be determined in a proceeding by the attorney to impress a lien on the check since the client was entitled to have his right to retain such check determined by a jury—In re Sebring, 264 N.Y.S. 379, 238 App.Div. 281.

32. Weitzel v. Schmitt, 178 N.Y.S. 429.

Amount of lien determined by subsequent proceeding

On a petition to set aside a satisfaction of judgment to the extent of an unsatisfied attorney's lien, the court in setting aside satisfaction has no authority to determine the amount for which judgment will be restored, but will merely set aside satisfaction to the extent of the attorney's lien, leaving the amount thereof to be determined thereafter in an appropriate proceeding—Weitzel v. Schmitt, 178 N.Y.S. 429.

33. Bremer v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co., 148 N.E. 241, 317 Ill. 580, affirming Clark v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co., 234 Ill.App. 98.

Prior to performance of service

A petition for an order to establish an attorney's charging lien was held to be premature when such petition was filed before the attorney had performed any service contributing to the successful prosecution of the client's claim—Bremer v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co., 148 N.E. 241, 317 Ill. 580, affirming Clark v. Lake, 234 Ill.App. 98.

34. Hansbrough v. D. W. Standrod & Co., 249 P. 897, 43 Idaho 119.

d. Jurisdiction and Venue

Jurisdiction to enforce charging liens is determined by rules stated hereunder.

In the absence of statutory provisions requiring the enforcement of charging liens in the courts where the client's cause of action is prosecuted, an attorney is not obliged to enforce his lien in the same court where his client's cause of action may proceed;[35] but he may begin in any court having jurisdiction to enforce such a lien.[36] However, where the forum is designated by statute and proceedings to enforce attorneys' liens are purely statutory, such proceedings must be brought in the forum so designated.[37] Further, as between trial

Full period of limitations

So long as no one is injured by the delay, an attorney is entitled to the full period of limitations for asserting his lien without losing it by laches.—Hansbrough v D W. Standrod & Co, 249 P 897, 43 Idaho 119

35. In re Levine's Estate, 278 N Y. S 36, 154 Misc 700, affirmed 286 N Y S 513, 247 App.Div. 19—6 C J. p 801 note 70.

Equity

(1) A court of chancery has general jurisdiction to enforce an attorney's lien for compensation on the property recovered by him for his infant client.—Pace v. Richardson, 202 S W 852, 133 Ark 422

(2) However, the right of an attorney to have his fee paid by the client and to enforce a lien, at common law or under Code (1907) § 3011, against her share of the estate, does not require intervention of equity, where such lien is regarded as following the client's portion of the funds into whatever court administration is pending.—Ex parte McLendon, 102 So 696, 212 Ala 403.

(3) An attorney could not maintain a suit in equity to establish a lien on certain property for services as attorney, in a suit theretofore prosecuted, where the legal remedy was adequate.—Smith v Tydings, 131 So 319, 100 Fla. 1414.

(4) Chancery had jurisdiction of an action by attorneys against a drainage district to have fixed their compensation for organizing the district and to obtain a lien on funds on deposit in a bank, the district having no other funds, the commissioners not being individually liable, and the funds not being within reach of garnishment at law.—Bayou Meto Drainage Dist v. Chapline, 220 S W 807, 143 Ark. 446

(5) Where plaintiffs, attorneys who had rendered services pursuant to express oral contract, gave notice after judgment for their client of their lien as provided by Code (1897) § 321, and cash sufficient to pay plaintiffs' claim was later deposited with the clerk of the district court by a referee, the lien attached to the fund, and equity has jurisdiction to determine the amount due on the contract and to enforce the lien.—Senneff, Bliss, Witwer & Senneff v. Sharpe, 174 N.W 491, 187 Iowa 790

(6) A consent decree rendered in a suit in equity brought by attorneys against the United States to enforce a lien on a certain fund, a portion of which was paid into court to determine the amount due the attorneys, constitutes a waiver of jurisdictional objections and renders irrelevant all questions as to the effect of contracts in creating a lien, and the effect of Rev St § 3477, as an obstacle to such lien, as well as the right to an injunction.—McGowan v Parish, 35 S Ct 543, 237 U S 285, 59 L Ed. 955, reversing Parish v. McGowan, 39 App D C 184.

Particular courts

(1) In Arkansas, under Act May 31, 1909 (L [1909] p 892), the circuit court cannot enforce a lien against damages recovered for the benefit of an estate of decedent in favor of an attorney who entered into a contract with the administrator, the proceeding must be in the probate court.—Carpenter v. Hazel, 194 S W 225, 128 Ark 416.

(2) In New York, surrogate's court has jurisdiction to determine and enforce the lien of an attorney for services rendered in the settlement and distribution of decedent's estate.—In re White, 166 N Y.S 158, 100 Misc. 56.

(3) Moreover, the surrogate's court's jurisdiction to enforce against executors a lien claimed by decedent's attorneys cannot be defeated on the theory that the attorneys' services were not rendered in such court, nor in relation to the administration of the estate, where the applicable lien statute affords equitable relief and is remedial in nature, and should be liberally construed.—In re Levine's Estate, 278 N Y.S 36, 154 Misc 700, affirmed 286 N Y S 513, 247 App Div 19

(4) Further, an attorney was entitled to have the amount of his attorney's lien on a certified draft in an attorney's possession, which was payable to his client and was drawn on funds obtained from the estate of the client's husband, determined in the supreme court, which obtained jurisdiction before the client filed a petition seeking to have the lien fixed in the surrogate's court.—Race v. Harris, 281 N Y.S. 47, 245 App Div 168.

(5) It has also been held that the Municipal Court of New York City has no power to enforce an attorney's lien.—Van der Beek v Thomason, 99 N Y S 538, 50 Misc 524.—Peo. v Fitzpatrick, 71 N Y S 191, 35 Misc 456

(6) Moreover, it has been held, under Judiciary L § 475, that the municipal court has no jurisdiction, on a motion of an attorney for plaintiff, to cancel a satisfaction of plaintiff's judgment, determine the extent of an attorney's lien, and issue an execution therefor against defendant.—Duringshoff v O B. Coates & Co, 157 N.Y S 230, 93 Misc. 485

(7) On the other hand, under Judiciary L §§ 474, 475, in part, it is held, that an attorney procuring judgment in the municipal court of New York City has a lien enforceable in the supreme court.—Duringshoff v. O. B Coates & Co, supra.

36. In re Levine's Estate, 278 N Y. S 36, 154 Misc 700, affirmed 286 N Y S 513, 247 App Div. 19—6 C J. p 801 note 71. See Borg v. Kawin & Co, 190 Ill App 62

Jurisdiction over fund

Jurisdiction over a fund against which an attorneys' lien is sought to be enforced empowers the court to entertain proceedings to enforce the lien.—In re Levine's Estate, 278 N.Y S. 36, 154 Misc 700, affirmed 286 N Y S 513, 247 App Div 19

Cause prosecuted by private negotiation

The court has no jurisdiction to enforce an attorney's lien on a cause of action prosecuted by private negotiation.—Universal Oil Products Co v. Standard Oil Co of Indiana, (D C Mo) 6 F Supp 37, aff (C C A) German v. Universal Oil Products Co. 77 F (2d) 70.

Application conferring jurisdiction

An application to the supreme court, by one who has filed claims with a board of water supply, through plaintiffs as his attorneys, and who has assigned the attorneys part of his claims for services rendered, for an order canceling the lien on the award and directing the comptroller to pay him the aggregate of awards, confers upon the supreme court jurisdiction to determine the amount of the lien.—In re Board of Water Supply of City of New York, 167 N.Y.S 531, 179 App. Div. 877.

37. Ark.—Carpenter v. Hazel, 194 S. W. 225, 128 Ark. 416.

or appellate courts, the granting and enforcement of charging liens is ordinarily an exercise of original jurisdiction,[38] and hence, is not within the power of a court having only appellate jurisdiction.[39]

Moreover, where two separate suits were commenced on the same cause of action in different counties, on the compromise of one suit on the merits and dismissal of both suits, an attorney for plaintiff should enforce a charging lien in the county where the suit was compromised and dismissed on the merits.[40]

e. Parties

Ordinary rules govern questions relating to parties in proceedings to enforce charging liens.

In a proceeding to enforce an attorney's lien, all persons interested are not only proper,[41] but necessary,[42] parties. However, where an attorney, entitled under a contract with his client to a percentage of the judgment recovered in an action by the client, sues to recover his fee, he need only make the judgment debtor a party,[43] and it is not necessary to make the judgment creditor,[44] or an equitable claimant thereof under the judgment creditor,[45] a party. Further, in a suit by an attorney for services in procuring a divorce for a wife, and to establish a lien on funds paid to the clerk of the court by the husband to satisfy a money judgment rendered against him, the husband is not a necessary party.[46] Where the parties to

Striking statement of demand

An attorney's statement of demand in an action to establish a lien for compensation or cause of action brought in another court was held to be properly stricken—Simon v. Globe Indemnity Co., 154 A. 238, 9 N.J. Misc. 392.

Jurisdiction held to be in trial court

Where local attorneys contracted with nonresident beneficiaries of policies to collect the proceeds thereof from a foreign insurance company and attorneys gave the company statutory notice of a lien for services and statutory service was had on the company and beneficiaries, the trial court had jurisdiction to entertain the attorneys' action to enforce their lien for services—State ex rel. Richardson v. Mueller, (Mo.App.) 90 S.W.(2d) 171.

40. Johnson v. Missouri Pacific R. Co., 215 S.W. 884, 140 Ark. 587.

In widow's suit for death of husband

Under Acts (1909) p. 892, giving an attorney a lien on his client's cause of action, where a widow by her attorney instituted an action for death of her husband against a railroad in one county, and thereafter instituted another action in another county, but compromised the case with the railroad, and dismissed the action pending in the second county, her attorney, to enforce his lien, should have resorted to the court in which the action, by dismissal after compromise, was settled on its merits, and cannot have his lien adjudicated in the court where action was first instituted—Johnson v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 215 S.W. 884, 140 Ark. 587.

Assignment of note

Attorneys who took an assignment of a note as security for the indebtedness of their client to them for legal services and, therefore, had a lien on such note were held to be the proper parties to sue thereon—Roberts v. Allen, 50 S.W.(2d) 965, 244 Ky. 353.

Attorney prosecuting appeal in own name

In a suit in equity, where forms may be disregarded, an attorney who took an appeal in his client's name may, if he so desires, prosecute the appeal on his own behalf after the client sought to dismiss it, in order to protect his lien interest in the cause of action arising from his contingent fee contract—Kellogg v. Winchell, 51 App.D.C. 17, 273 F. 745, 16 A.L.R. 1159.

42. Clarke v. Ratcliffe, 8 Misc. 162.

Client or plaintiff in main action

(1) In a proceeding by an attorney for the determination of a statutory lien on a cause of action, plaintiff in the main action, whose claim is still open, is a necessary party—Artale v. Columbia Ins. Co., 162 A. 585, 109 N.J.Law 463, reversing 157 A. 157, 108 N.J.Law 240.

(2) To a suit by an attorney having a contract for a contingent fee to enforce his right against property or a fund, the client is a necessary party—Spellman v. Bankers' Trust Co., (C.C.A.N.Y.) 6 F.(2d) 799.

In proceedings to set aside a consent judgment, the circuit court was without jurisdiction to declare a lien on the causes of action in favor of plaintiffs' former attorney who was not made a party—National Bread Co. v. Bird, 145 So. 462, 226 Ala. 40.

In action on undertaking on appeal

Where an attorney procures for his client a judgment for costs, an action on the undertaking which was given on appeal should be prosecuted in the name of the attorney as the real party in interest.—Delaney v. Miller, 32 N.Y.S. 505, 84 Hun 244—Kipp v. Rapp, 2 How.Pr.(N.S.) (N.Y.) 109.

After garnishment

Where attorneys, who recovered judgment for their client, had no agreement as to compensation, and, although informed of the garnishment of the proceeds of the judgment by other creditors of the client, took no steps to protect their rights, it has been held, although payment of the amount of the judgment to the garnishing creditors did not satisfy the same, and destroy the lien of such attorneys given by Comp.L. (1917) § 846, yet, such attorneys, as they could follow the proceeds into the hands of garnishing creditors, will not be allowed to enforce their lien solely against the judgment debtor, and should be compelled to bring in all of the parties, either in an independent proceeding or by intervention in the original proceeding.—Lundy v. Cappuccio, 181 P. 165, 54 Utah 420.

an action settle the cause of action, plaintiff therein is a necessary party to an action by his attorney to enforce his lien against the fund arising from the settlement.[47] Of course, persons whose interests cannot be affected by the decision in the case are neither necessary nor proper parties.[48]

Intervention. When such action is necessary in order to protect and enforce the lien of an attorney, he may be permitted to intervene as a party in the original action.[49]

f. Process and Notice

Process and notices in proceedings to enforce charging liens must comply with the practice of the particular jurisdiction.

In the absence of a statutory requirement, it is unnecessary that the copies of process served in proceedings to enforce an attorney's charging lien be certified.[50] Notice to a receiver, in whom has vested the subject matter of the lien, may be required.[51]

g. Pleading

Ordinary rules govern pleadings in proceedings to enforce charging liens of attorneys

In a proceeding to enforce a charging lien every fact essential to the existence thereof must be stated in the bill, complaint, or petition.[52] It is not necessary to state that the action is brought under a certain statute; it is sufficient if the pe-

Attorney instituting suit

An attorney, who instituted a suit under a contract with his client whereby he was to receive a percentage of the fund recovered, is vested with a lien interest in the cause of action which entitles him to intervene in the suit to protect it.—Kellogg v. Winchell, 51 App D C 17, 273 F. 745, 16 A L R 1159

Intervention in creditors' suit

Fellow attorney employed to obtain compensation for employing attorney in creditors' suit could, by intervention in such creditors' suit, have a lien on a judgment awarding compensation established and paid.—Barge v. Ownby, 153 S E 49, 170 Ga 440

Determination of liability

On intervention to enforce an attorney's lien, liability will be determined as in the original suit.—Denson v Alabama Fuel & Iron Co., 73 So. 525, 198 Ala. 383.

Overruling motion to dismiss

In a judgment creditor's action against a debtor to set aside certain deeds, a motion to dismiss an intervening petition of the creditor's attorney who recorded an attorney's lien for his services was held properly to be overruled, since such lien operated as an assignment of interest in the judgment making the attorney the proper party.—Grimes Sav. Bank v McHarg, 251 N W 51, 217 Iowa 636.

Sale of interest pending suit

(1) Where complainants in a partition suit sold interest pending the suit, an attorney's lien could, nevertheless, be enforced in an intervention proceeding.—Owens v. Bolt, 118 So. 590, 218 Ala. 344

(2) Moreover, the purchaser of complainants' interest pending the partition suit could be made a party to the intervention proceeding to enforce complainants' attorney's lien.—Owens v Bolt, supra

(3) However, the attorney cannot force the suit to a decree against the wishes of the other parties, but his rights are merely to enforce his lien to a decree in order to recover his fees.—Owens v Bolt, supra

Refusal of intervention

A refusal to permit an attorney to intervene in a suit is held not to prejudice his lien against the judgment.—Anderson v Star-Barr Oil Co., 243 P 394, 34 Wyo. 332

50. York v. Edwards, (Ga App.) 133 S E 339.

Lien on land

In statutory proceedings to foreclose an attorney's lien on land, service of an ordinary, instead of a certified, copy of rule nisi did not render the service and proceedings void.—York v. Edwards, (Ga App.) 133 S E 339

51. Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Kaufman, 290 N Y S 669

Notice to receiver

An attorney's lien against a cause of action for foreclosure of a mechanic's lien which vested in the receiver appointed for plaintiff in the lien foreclosure action must be determined and enforced in proper application to the court, on notice to the receiver as prescribed by statute.—Ætna Life Ins. Co v. Kaufman, 290 N Y S 669

52. Gooding v Lyon, 166 P 564, 63 Colo. 328—6 C J p 802 note 1.

Principles of equity pleading not controlling

A proceeding to enforce the attorneys' liens provided for by statute has been held not to be controlled by principles of equity pleading.—Berkemeier v Dormuralt Motor Sales, 263 Ill App 211.

Amount due

(1) The amount due must be alleged either by stating a contract fixing the amount, or by averring the value of the services charged for.—Coombe v Knox, 72 P 641, 28 Mont 202, 205—6 C J p 803 note 2

(2) However, where a petition for the foreclosure of an attorney's lien and the lien, made part of the petition, fully set forth the nature of the cause and of the litigation in which the legal services were rendered on an implied contract or quantum meruit, stating a specific charge for each item of services was held to be unnecessary.—York v. Edwards, (Ga App.) 133 S E 339.

Service of notice of contract

(1) A petition setting out a compensation contract between plaintiff attorneys and their client, and alleging that a copy thereof was duly served in writing on defendant, sufficiently alleges a notice to defendant, under Rev St (1909) § 965, requiring written notice of the attorney's claim to be served.—Simpson v Federal Lead Co., (Mo App.) 187 S W 1123

(2) Where a petition claiming an attorney's lien alleged that defendant was served with process in a suit filed against it by plaintiff as attorney, it was not necessary to allege that written notice of plaintiff's contract with the client was given to defendant.—Fenn v Hart Dairy Co., (Mo App.) 83 S W (2d) 120

Complaint, bill, or petition sufficient

(1) A complaint alleging that an attorney made advances under an express agreement that he should reimburse himself out of collections

tition sets forth such facts as bring it within the statute,[53] and, if the pleader sets forth more than is necessary to state his cause of action under the statute, such additional statements may be considered as surplusage.[54]

On intervention Where an attorney in order to protect his charging lien is permitted to intervene as a party, in the action in which he has performed services it is proper practice for the attorney, on being admitted as a party, to file a petition in his own name against both plaintiff and defendant, setting forth the particulars of his claim and lien, so that if disputed by them answers could be filed, and the issues made up, as in other cases.[55]

Answer. Affirmative defenses, such as waiver or laches, must be pleaded in the answer.[56]

Cross bill. An attorney's lien may in a proper case be set up in a cross bill.[57]

h. Evidence

General rules of evidence are applicable to questions of evidence in proceedings to enforce attorneys' charging liens.

General rules of evidence, which are discussed in the title Evidence in this work, are applicable to evidence in proceedings brought to enforce attorneys' charging liens. For example, general rules of evidence are applicable to such proceedings as respects presumptions and burden of proof,[58] ad-

made, and praying to have a lien declared on collections in his hands, was held to state a cause of action of which the chancery court had jurisdiction—Arnold v Oliver, 237 S W. 425, 152 Ark 47

(2) A bill to impress a lien in favor of an attorney on assets of a banking corporation in possession of defendants, who are protective committee of depositors who retained the attorney to furnish a plan to recapture assets from receiver under an agreement that the attorney should be paid from the assets when recaptured, was held to state a cause of action as against a motion to dismiss, since the assets recaptured were a sufficient "identifiable fund" and the agreement alleged may create a lien—Walker v Hartford Realization Co, (C C A Conn) 74 F (2d) 56

(3) A petition was held to sufficiently allege an agreement whereby an attorney rendered services in protecting and preserving the life beneficiary's interest in a trust fund, for which he was to be paid out of her interest in the trust fund—Strong v Dutcher, 174 N Y S 352, 186 App Div 307.

Complaint, bill, or petition insufficient

(1) A complaint alleging service of notice of an attorney's lien was held not to state a cause of action—Keith v Schuetzbeim, 230 N W 858, 53 S D. 421.

(2) A bill was held not to state facts entitling attorneys to a lien on a client's funds in the treasury for services in securing a war claim settlement under the Settlement of War Claims Act (1928) § 9—Mellon v. Jones, 60 App D C 269, 51 F (2d) 431, certiorari denied Jones v Mellon, 52 S Ct. 22, 284 U S 641, 76 L Ed 545

(3) A petition to enforce an attorney's lien in a workman's compensation case, notice of which was not served on defendant's attorney, was held to be bad on demurrer—Polensek v Sheridan Coal Co, 253 P. 605, 122 Kan 725

(4) A petition to establish a lien for an attorney's services on a fund, not alleging the amount that was payable from a fund secured for defendant, was held to be insufficient—Ilyers v Western & Southern Life Ins Co, 169 N E 577, 33 Ohio App 331

Filing of papers

(1) A stenographer's minutes need not be filed with other papers in proceedings for the substitution of attorneys and to determine an attorney's lien—Application of H C Roberts Electric Supply Co, 226 N.Y S 211, 131 Misc 119

(2) Certified copies of an order in proceedings for substitution of attorneys and to determine an attorney's lien may, however, be filed in the county clerk's office—Application of H C Roberts Electric Supply Co, supra

Complaint brought to recover statutory lien

A complaint by attorneys against a circuit court clerk, to recover fees from a judgment secured for their client, was held to be brought to recover their statutory attorneys' lien, and not under Burns St Annot.(1914) § 1003, empowering attorneys to receive their client's money under certain circumstances—State v. Blecke, 116 N E. 2, 171 Ind App 23

Not demurrable

(1) A cross bill in a suit to foreclose a mortgage containing covenants of warranty which set up a statutory attorneys' lien on such land claimed by attorneys for the prosecution of pending litigation in behalf of a deceased party, whose heir conveyed such land to the mortgagor by deed in escrow to be delivered on payment by the mortgagor of the attorneys' fee which had not been paid, was held not demurrable for want of equity—Faulk v. Wise, 166 So. 47, 231 Ala 535

(2) A cross bill setting up a valid claim to a statutory attorneys' lien on land was not demurrable because it also sought cancellation of the mortgage on the land which was not warranted under the circumstances—Faulk v Wise, supra

Presumptions

(1) Where there is no proof as to the amount of an attorney's lien for services, it cannot be presumed that it equals or exceeds the amount of the judgment. If there is any presumption, it is to the contrary—Bloch v Bloch, 131 N.Y S. 475, 136 App Div. 770

(2) Where efforts of an attorney under a contingent fee contract were prevented by opposition of the client, the presumption arose in an action brought by the attorney to establish and enforce a lien that the attorney's efforts would have been successful in the absence of such opposition.—Lewis v. Braun, 191 N E 56, 356 Ill 467.

Burden of proof

(1) The burden of proof is on plaintiff to show that he comes within the lien statute by establishing the facts alleged in his complaint—

(3) In an attorneys' action to establish and enforce an attorneys' lien based on a specific contract made while the relation of attorney and client existed, plaintiffs have the burden of showing the sum sued for is a reasonable fee, although Rev St (1909) § 964 provides that attorneys' fees are not restrained by law, and § 965 authorizes percentage agreements for compensation—Thompson v. (6) In an action to enforce an attorney's lien, it was held that delivery by deceased employee's group insurer of insurance check to a former employer presumptively constituted such employer the insurer's agent, casting on such insurer the burden of showing that the employer was the beneficiary's agent—Brookshire v Metropolitan Life Ins. Evidence admissible

(1) The admission of prior proceedings to support an attorney's lien was authorized, notwithstanding an apparent lapse of time, where the evidence indicated that the date given as the termination of the suit was a typographical error—Dyal v. Watson, 162 S E 682, 174 Ga 330

(2) In an intervention to enforce an attorney's lien, proof of plaintiff's ratification of deceased husband's contract, employing an attorney to prosecute the claim for injuries, was held to be competent, where plaintiff's acts after the husband's death were alleged in the intervention—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. v. Terral, 11 S.W (2d) 768, 178 Ark 475

Evidence inadmissible

(1) In an action for personal injuries with intervention by plaintiff's attorney to have his right to an attorney's lien determined, an offer to prove that the case came to the attorney through the solicitation by a layman was held not admissible under the answer—Heuser v Chicago, B & Q R. Co, 164 N W. 984, 138 Minn 286

(2) In an intervention to establish an attorney's lien, a transcript of the proceedings in the district court of another state, where defendant claimed the contract forming the basis of a cause of action was adjudicated, was held properly to be rejected on the ground that the court of such other state did not pass on the same contract—Heuser v. Chicago, B & Q R Co, supra.

Affidavits permitted

An application, under Gen St (1915) § 485, for distribution of funds against which several attorneys' liens are claimed, is a motion within § 7460 (Code Civ Proc § 556), on which § 7254 (Code Civ Proc § 350) expressly permits the use of affidavits at a hearing—Ricardo v. Evidence sufficient

(1) Evidence was held to support the judgment establishing attorney's lien—Smith v Nicholson, 289 S W 349, 221 Mo.App 428, certiorari quashed State ex rel Bradley v Trimble, 289 S.W 922, 316 Mo 97

(2) Evidence was held to establish that an attorney performed a contract for services in association with another attorney, to whom the unsuccessful litigant paid judgment, from which he deducted percentage as a fee, entitling the associate to an equitable lien for his share of the fee withheld from him—Fried v Cahn, 267 N Y S 182, 239 App Div 213, motion granted 191 N E 520, 264 N.Y. 471

(3) Evidence in an action to enforce an attorney's statutory lien was held to be sufficient to show that a letter alleged to have been written by attorneys to client, even if genuine, did not constitute a contract as to the attorneys' compensation for legal services to be rendered—Lyon v Oliver, 147 N E 251, 316 Ill 292, reversing 227 Ill App 511.

(4) Evidence in an action to enforce an attorney's lien was held to warrant a finding that a typewritten letter, purporting to state the terms under which the attorneys would undertake a litigation for a client, was forgery—Lyon v. Oliver, supra

(5) In an action against a railroad for personal injury with intervention by plaintiff's attorney to establish his lien, evidence was held to be sufficient to warrant a directed verdict for the intervener—Heuser v Chicago, B. & Q R Co, 164 N.W 984, 138 Minn 286

(6) In an attorney's action against a client and an opposing party to collect a contingent fee and to enforce an attorney's lien therefor, where it was stipulated that definite sum had been offered and refused by client as settlement and the court found that later, without the attorney's knowledge, settlement was made by collusion to defraud attorney, the amount offered and refused was the proper basis for computing the contingent fee and lien when no other amount was shown in the evidence—Sowers v Robertson, 58 P (2d) 1105, 144 Kan. 273

Evidence insufficient

(1) Evidence was held not to show that money paid by the trustee of a trust estate, in the administration thereof and under the control of the circuit court wherein the trust estate was pending, resulted or arose out of a suit that was filed and dismissed in another county, so as to authorize the enforcement of a lien by an attorney for fees in a suit which was dismissed—Cell v Robinson, (Mo App) 79 S W.(2d) 489.

(2) In equitable proceedings to enforce an attorney's lien against a judgment after the client had entered satisfaction thereof, evidence by the client and a witness that they had perjured themselves at the trial under the inducement of the attorney was held insufficient to sustain the court's finding that the attorney was guilty of the fraud charged, so as to have lost his lien against defendant.—Machcinski v Lehigh Valley R Co, (C C A N Y.) 272 F 920

(3) Where an attorney had performed services for his client, and rendered an itemized statement thereof, which was approved by the client, and advanced her money to take up a loan, she agreeing to secure that and other advancements, also the charges for services, by a pledge of stock owned by her, evidence in an action to enforce the lien was held insufficient to show that the attorney should secure a further loan to protect her property about to be sold for taxes—Van Doren v Mackenzie, 180 N.Y S 778, 190 App Div. 847.

i. Trial

Ordinary rules govern the trial of proceedings for the enforcement of attorneys' charging liens.

Ordinary rules governing the trial of civil cases, as considered in the title Trial elsewhere in this work, are applicable to the trial of proceedings for the enforcement of an attorney's charging lien.[61]

j. Allowance of Lien, Judgment or Decree, and Review

In the allowance of charging liens, the judgments or decrees of enforcement, and the proceedings for review thereof are governed by ordinary rules in civil actions generally, in so far as such rules may be applicable.

In proceedings to enforce an attorney's charging lien, the lien to which the attorney is properly entitled may be allowed in accordance with his case as established.[62]

Judgment or decree. The rules applicable to judgments in civil actions generally apply to judgments in actions brought to enforce charging liens of attorneys.[63] The judgment should conform to an applicant's attorney, employed to secure his reinstatement as a clerk in the park department of the city of New York, the evidence was held to be insufficient to sustain the court's determination that the attorney's conduct had been such as would vitiate his contract for half the back pay recovered by him—In re Liebergall, 178 N.Y.S. 857, 189 App.Div. 681. See Heron v. Roberts, 192 Ill.App. 516.

(5) Conflicting evidence supported a judgment refusing to enforce a lien for fees claimed by an attorney for plaintiff in an action for injuries, on the ground that the attorney acted in bad faith in accepting the contract from plaintiff when he was aware of the existence of the contract held by other attorneys and that they had not been discharged by plaintiff—McArthur v. Lotridge, (Okl.) 58 P.(2d) 326.

Hearing and notice thereof

(1) A proceeding to enforce an attorney's statutory lien may be heard in a court of equity, but it may also be heard in a court of law—Berkemeier v. Dormuralt Motor Sales, 263 Ill.App. 211.

(2) Notice of hearing need not be given former client on an attorney's petition to establish a lien—Tulka v. Chicago City Ry. Co., 259 Ill.App. 234.

Finding not supported by evidence

(1) In a proceeding by an attorney to impress a lien on a check, a finding to the effect that the client stole the check or obtained it by force or fraud was held not supported by the evidence—In re Sebring, 264 N.Y.S. 379, 238 App.Div. 281.

(2) In summary proceedings to establish an attorney's lien, a finding that a retainer was signed by plaintiff as client was held to be against the weight of the evidence.—Tricano v. Coney Island & B. R. Co., 210 N.Y.S. 201, 213 App.Div. 268.

Question of fact or for jury

(1) In proceedings to establish an attorney's lien, conflicting evidence was held to present a question of fact as to the existence or waiver of the lien.—Denson v. Alabama Fuel & Iron Co., 73 So. 525, 198 Ala. 383.

(2) In a proceeding by attorneys to establish a lien on a judgment, the question whether an attorney, who was the brother of the client and who represented her, etc., contracted to pay petitioners the amount claimed was held to be one of fact—Boyle v. Waters, 173 N.W. 519, 206 Mich. 515.

(3) In an action to enforce an attorney's lien, whether insurer received notice of the attorney's employment by the beneficiary before paying the insurance was held to be a question for the jury—Brookshire v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., (Mo.App.) 56 S.W.(2d) 817.

(4) In an action to enforce an attorney's lien, whether a former employer, to whom insured delivered an insurance check before receiving notice of plaintiff's employment by the beneficiary, was the agent of insurer or the beneficiary was held to be a question for the jury—Brookshire v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., supra.

(5) Where the evidence, in an action brought to enforce an attorney's statutory lien, whether an attorney was retained in a personal injury action was conflicting, the matter was for the jury and not for the trial court to determine—Jacobs v. United Electric Rys. Co., 125 A. 286, 46 R.I. 230.

(6) In an action to enforce an attorney's lien, the reasonable value of services performed as the measure of the attorney's lien is a question for the jury—Jacobs v. United Electric Rys. Co., 125 A. 286, 46 R.I. 230.

(7) In an action to enforce a lien for the prosecution of a minor's personal injury action, whether it was necessary for the minor to have an attorney was a question for the jury—Jacobs v. United Electric Rys. Co., supra.

Order of reference not reviewable

An order of reference to take testimony respecting an attorney's services in proceedings to enforce an attorney's lien cannot be reviewed on a motion to have the fact issues tried by a jury—In re Podell, 245 N.Y.S. 28, 138 Misc. 6.

62. Lehigh & N.E.R. Co. v. Finnerty, (C.C.A.N.J.) 61 F.(2d) 289, certiorari denied 53 S.Ct. 292, 287 U.S. 668, 77 L.Ed. 576.

On cause of action

An attorney's motion for the enforcement of an attorney's lien in accordance with law was held to be a sufficient basis for the allowance of a lien on a client's cause of action, payable by defendant, although the notice claimed a lien on the sum paid the client—Lehigh & N.E.R. Co. v. Finnerty, 61 F.(2d) 289, certiorari denied 53 S.Ct. 292, 287 U.S. 668, 77 L.Ed. 576.

63. Castigliano v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 163 N.W. 741, 137 Minn. 335.

Decree for specific performance

A decree declaring a lien in an attorney's favor for defending a suit, on a client's failure to convey an agreed oil interest on certain land for services, was held to be one for specific performance—Perritt v. Saxon, 292 S.W. 139, 173 Ark. 359.

Qualification to preclude bar of new suit

A decree finally dismissing a bill claiming a lien for an attorney's fee against a client's land acquired on a foreclosure proceeding through the attorney's services should be qualified so as not to bar a new suit on the appropriate equitable basis, where the attorney might have equity for payment of such fees on the client's resale of such land because of the trust relationship between the parties—Guthrie v. Home Building & Loan Co., 156 So. 882, 116 Fla. 822.

Judgment declaring certain sum as lien on recovered property held proper

Where an attorney employed by an unrestricted Creek freedman, while a minor over eighteen, through his guardian, procured a judgment for such minor, canceling his pretended deed to his former attorney, and the proofs.[64] Moreover, where statutes provide for the enforcement of attorneys' liens, only judgments in conformity with the terms of such statutes are valid.[65] In a proceeding by an attorney to enforce his lien against the parties to the action, he may get an absolute judgment against his client for the amount he is entitled to, and an alternative judgment against the other defendant that he pay the amount covered by the lien if such amount is not collectable out of the client.[66] The judgment need not, however, provide that execution shall first issue against his client, although all the proceeds of the settlement had been paid to him, where it is expressly found that he did not appear, that he was without the jurisdiction of the court, and that he was financially irresponsible.[67] No judgment can be entered in favor of an attorney in a proceeding which is determinable on the entry of a final order.[68]

Review. On the review of proceedings brought to enforce an attorney's charging lien, the decision rendered by the lower court is to be regarded as a judgment.[69]

the minor, after majority and pending the former attorney's appeal to the supreme court, agreed to pay the subsequently employed attorney a contingent fee, and gave a lien on the land recovered, and where the former attorney, with notice, procured a deed from the minor and dismissed the appeal, a judgment for the subsequently employed attorney, declaring the sum of one thousand two hundred dollars to be a first lien on the land, was properly rendered—Smith v. Smith, 184 P 82, 80 Okl. 136.

Money judgment instead of order for revivor

The fact that the court enters a money judgment against the judgment debtor for the amount of the lien, instead of an order for revivor, goes to the form and not to the substance—Greek v McDaniel, 94 N W 518, 68 Neb 569

In absence of demand for recognition judgment allowable only for fees proved

In a case where an attorney does not demand recognition of a lien on a judgment, the court can allow a judgment only for the attorney's fees proved.—Strickland v. Livingston Bank, 3 La App 667.

Provision adjudging lien on cause of action and proceeds

A provision adjudging plaintiffs' attorney to have a lien on the cause of action and any proceeds recovered was held improperly to be included in the judgment—Kolb v Mortimer, 155 N Y S 644, 171 App Div 901.

Consolidation of several liens

The consolidation of several liens into one suit constitutes, at most, merely an irregularity or error which does not render the judgment void—Suwannee Turpentine Co. v. Baxter, 35 S E. 142, 109 Ga 597.

Matters considered on objection to decision on merits

Where, on the return day of a rule to show cause based on an attorney's petition that the court determine an attorney's right to a lien and the amount thereof, parties proceeded to a hearing on the merits and exception was taken only to a decision on the merits, questions with respect to the answer and the framing of the issue were held to be waived—Di Furia v. § 1. Definition and History

The attorney general is the chief law officer of the state government or of the federal government, as the case may be.

An attorney general is the chief law officer of a state government[1] or of the federal government,[2] as the case may be. His office as well as his designation or title is one which is derived from the common law of England where from an early date the attorney general has been the chief legal representative of the sovereign whose duty it is to represent the crown in civil and criminal matters in the courts.[3] In the United States the office is one which is provided for by the constitutional and statutory provisions of the various states and, with reference to the federal government, is established by act of congress [Rev St. § 346, U.S.C.A. tit 5 c 5 § 291], wherein provision is made for an executive department to be known as the department of justice and an attorney general who shall be the head thereof.[4]

Distinguished from prosecuting attorney. The office of attorney general is not to be confused with that of prosecuting, county, or district attorney, where the two functions have been separated by law, the office of the latter being to represent the state, county, or district in the lower courts in the locality for which he is appointed or elected.[5]

§ 2. Appointment, Qualification, and Tenure

The appointment, qualification, and tenure of attorneys general are controlled by constitutional and statutory provisions.

General rules as to the appointment, qualification, and tenure of public officers which are considered in detail in the title Officers §§ 27–72 [46 C.J. page 950 note 22–page 1006 note 86], and, more particularly, with reference to state officers in the title States §§ 68–79 [59 C.J. page 125 note 68–page 136 note 31], and with reference to federal officers in the title United States §§ 36 and 37 [65 C.J. page 1275 note 39–page 1276 note 71], have, where not limited by express constitutional or statutory provisions, been applied with reference to the office of attorney general, as to his eligibility to office,[6] as to the right of the governor to appoint upon the failure of the state legislature to exercise a power vested in it,[7] as to whether an appointee to fill a vacancy holds for the unexpired term or until the next general election,[8] and as to the recognition of an officer in possession of the office as a de facto officer.[9]

§ 3. Deputies, Assistants, and Substitutes

a. State officers
b. Federal officers

a. State Officers

An attorney general, both at common law and under constitutional and statutory authority, may be accorded such necessary deputies and assistants as he may require for the performance of his duties, such assistants being, with regard to their appointment, qualifications, authorities, and duties, controlled by the principles applicable to other public officers and employees.

Where the office of attorney general is created by the constitutional provisions of the state and without express enumeration thereof, he is required to perform such duties as may be prescribed by law, he has been held of necessity to have power to appoint the necessary deputies and assistants required to aid him in carrying out such duties,[10] and as a rule statutory provision is made for their appointment.[11] Where such specific provision is made, it would seem to exclude the inference of an authority in the attorney general to appoint and employ assistants in cases not within the statute,[12] although it has been held under a statute authorizing the attorney general to take charge of the opposition to claims against the estates of intestates leaving no heirs that he has authority to appoint attorneys, other than those appointed as assistant attorneys general by reason of specific provisions of the statutes, as his assistants to aid him in making inquiries and examinations provided for by the statute.[13]

Right to appoint or employ special assistants or counsel. Unless authorized by statute, an attorney general has no authority to appoint special counsel to act generally for him in actions or proceedings in which the state is interested, so as to charge the state with the value of their services.[14] Therefore, it has been held that attorney general has no authority to procure the opinion of counsel at the expense of the state,[15] to employ the assistance of counsel to resist the enactment of a law,[16] or to defend an action brought against the state,[17] to employ an expert to assist him in the defense of an action against the state;[18] or to employ a district attorney to perform services in his own district, on behalf of the government but not pertaining to his office.[19]

The attorney general may, in the absence of statutory inhibition, be represented by special private purposes of convenience. We may say the office of prosecuting attorney has been carved out of that of Attorney General and made an independent office, having exclusive control, to some extent, of business of the state, arising within the county"—State v. An absolute resignation, to take effect immediately, written and deposited in the mail the day before the state election by a federal district attorney and directed to the president of the United States, the proper officer to receive his resignation, vacates his office and renders him eligible to be chosen as attorney general of the state at the election held upon the following day notwithstanding a constitutional provision that no person holding any lucrative office under the government of the United States shall be eligible to any civil office of profit in the state—State v. counsel in civil actions or proceedings instituted in his name, notwithstanding he may not obligate the state to pay for their services,[20] although he cannot delegate to another the power he is authorized to exercise and deprive himself of the right to control the action.[21] So, in civil cases in which the attorney general of a state is a party, he may be represented by attorneys procured and paid by relators or other private parties who have a special interest in the maintenance of the rights in question,[22] but a different rule has been applied in the case of criminal prosecutions and a private prosecutor, it has been held, cannot retain counsel to aid the law officers of the government[23] although it would also appear that a counselor may, at the request of the attorney general, be admitted to aid him in the prosecution and without any pecuniary consideration being paid to him or any other consideration which may be supposed to influence him except a disinterested regard for the public good.[24]

When authorized by statute, the attorney general may, of course, appoint another attorney to assist in a criminal prosecution or to conduct the prosecution alone;[25] and he may employ counsel to assist him in any suit where the state is a party.[26] Such statutes are strictly construed.[27]

Term of employment. A contract hiring a special assistant for a term extending beyond the attorney general's period of office is binding until attacked by some one in a position to do so, as by his successor in office,[28] and there is nothing to prevent a ratification of such agreement by such successor in office.[29] So where the litigation in which special counsel is employed extends beyond the term of office of the attorney general his successor may ratify the agreement made by him and continue the employment of such counsel notwithstanding no specific appropriation for his payment has been made.[30]

Status, eligibility, and qualification of deputies or assistants. Deputy or special assistant attorneys general appointed under statutes conferring upon them a definite term of office and particular duties and authorities are state officers[31] and their offices are civil offices.[32] From this it follows that they must possess the qualifications and are subject to the disabilities of other appointees to civil offices of the state.[33] Hence a member of the state

Attorney general also appearing
The attorney general is not forbidden to associate with him in the prosecution of a suit in behalf of the state a duly licensed attorney at law, who is not by statute an assistant attorney general, and an appeal by the state will not be dismissed because of the appearance of such attorney, especially where the appearance of the attorney general was also entered of record.—Taylor v. Allen, 91 So. 635, 151 La. 82.

Tax appeal cases
Where the attorney general is given a fifteen per cent commission on all increased taxes he secures by a tax appeal, although he may not bind the state for the hire of additional counsel for such cases he may employ them at his own expense where the pressure of official duties warrants it just as any citizen may employ counsel to represent him.—Edward Hines Yellow Pine Trustees v. Emergency
(1) Under a statute permitting the employment of counsel other than the attorney general in case an emergency arises which, in the opinion of the attorney general, requires such employment in order properly to protect the interests of the commonwealth, the governor may employ special counsel when requested to do so by the attorney general where the interest of the commonwealth is affected although there is no statute making it the duty of the attorney general to represent the commonwealth in the action, proceeding, prosecution, or matter concerning which special counsel are employed.—Gordon v. Morrow, 218 S.W. 258, 186 Ky. 713.

(2) Where, in a proceeding against an estate for the purpose of collecting inheritance taxes, investigations must be made outside of the state, special counsel may properly be employed.—Gordon v. Morrow, supra.

(3) Whether an emergency exists that will warrant employment of special counsel to institute suits to recover property as escheated is to be determined by the attorney general, and when his request falls within reasonable bounds the court will not interfere with the employment if it is legally made by the governor.—Commonwealth v. Roberta Coal Co., 216 S.W. 584, 186 Ky. 394.

(4) The emergency must arise with respect to some particularly named suit or proceeding, prosecution or thing, and does not contemplate the general employment of special counsel to perform general legal services although such services in the opinion of the attorney general might be of benefit to the state.—Commonwealth v. Roberta Coal Co., supra.

legislature may be disqualified to an appointment to an office created during his term in the legislature[34] or a member of the legislature may be disqualified from becoming a deputy or assistant attorney general by reason of a constitutional provision that an officer in one branch, legislative, executive, or judicial, of the state government shall not exercise powers belonging to either of the other branches.[35] Whether counsel employed by the attorney general under authority of a resolution of a state commission is in the status of an officer or a mere agent or employee depends on the powers given to him rather than the name given to him by the resolution,[36] and when he is not a public officer he need not possess the statutory qualifications for public office.[37]

It would seem that a deputy attorney general appointed for the purpose of conducting a specific investigation may be disqualified by reason of his interest in the investigation[38] although he will not necessarily be disqualified by his public utterances where they are consistent with his duties as an examining officer.[39]

A constitutional requirement of competitive civil service examinations where practicable renders invalid a statute arbitrarily exempting all positions in connection with a particular bureau in the attorney general's department from civil service examinations,[40] and the fact that appointments already made could not have been based on an examination, and therefore were properly exempted, is not material if the statute authorizes the attorney general to create new positions, determine their duties, and make appointments without examination.[41] Moreover, although the constitution permits exemption from examination where none is practicable, the statute granting exemption must show a bona fide attempt to classify positions, and, if some position subsequently created may well be based on examination, suitable provision must be made therefor.[42]

Presumptions and proof of appointment or authority. It has been held that state courts will not take judicial notice of the official character

Incumbency of two offices

Under a statute conferring power upon the attorney general to designate assistants to represent him for the prosecution of the criminal business of the state, he may designate one who is at the time the prosecutor of the pleas for the particular county.—State v. Bolitho, 136 A. 164, 103 N.J. Law 246, affirmed 146 A. 927, 104 N.J. Law 446.

Investigation of bank

A witness subpoenaed to testify in a bank investigation cannot assert as a ground for quashing the subpoena that the deputy attorney general in charge of the investigation holds dual offices with incompatible duties where he is acting as deputy attorney general and also as assistant district attorney.—In re Marcus, 248 N.Y.S. 219, 139 Misc. 675, affirmed 247 N.Y.S. 1008, 232 App. Div. 731, motion granted 175 N.E. 344, 255 N.Y. 630.

Previous official position

Where a special assistant attorney general resigned from his office before accepting a contract for legal services with the Colorado River Commission and the attorney general as an assistant to the attorney general, he no longer had any official relation to the state or the state's attorney and, like any other attorney, was privileged to accept the employment by the commission and the attorney general.—Moore v. Representation of state

Where a resolution of employment authorizes the attorney general to employ counsel as his assistant to represent "the state," such counsel is an official of the state and an assistant attorney general, but where he has only advisory powers and does not represent the state, he is a mere employee or agent.—State v. Matters not showing disqualification

(1) One who is appointed deputy attorney general in charge of an investigation of an insolvent bank is not disqualified by his former relationship with litigations representing interests as to the bank where it appeared that the connection was sufficiently remote to remove suspicion of prejudice and that the attorney on his appointment severed his connection with the pending litigation.—In re Marcus, 248 N.Y.S. 219, 139 Misc. 675, affirmed 247 N.Y.S. 1008, 232 App. Div. 731, motion granted 175 N.E. 344, 255 N.Y. 630.

(2) A deputy attorney general in charge of the investigation of an insolvent bank is not disqualified by the fact that attorneys associated as counsel for a group of the bank depositors and stockholders are associated with him, since there can be no conflict of interests between the investigation into the affairs and practices of bank officials for the purpose of safeguarding the public from fraudulent practices and the recovery of all available assets for the depositors and stockholders.—In re Marcus, supra.

Investigation of bank

Public utterances of a deputy attorney general in charge of the investigation of an insolvent bank, showing an intention to make a thorough investigation and prosecute if evidence of misfeasance of persons in control of the bank's affairs was found, did not show prejudice disqualifying him.—In re Marcus, 248 N.Y.S. 219, 139 Misc. 675, affirmed 247 N.Y.S. 1008, 232 App. Div. 731, motion granted 175 N.E. 344, 255 N.Y. 630.

of the deputies or assistants of the attorney general,[43] but one challenging the authority of an assistant must establish want of authority at the trial like any other fact.[44]

It has also been held that the authority of an assistant may not be collaterally questioned.[45]

The appointment of an assistant will be presumed to have been made regularly and according to law.[46] Where the authority of the assistant or deputy is challenged, it may be established by proof as any other fact may be proved,[47] and production of a certificate of appointment,[48] or of a writing signed by those having authority to appoint such assistant,[49] will be sufficient prima facie to establish his right to act as an assistant. Immaterial inaccuracies in the instrument of appointment will not render the appointment invalid.[50] Moreover a certified copy of the entry of the oath of a special assistant attorney general on the records of the executive council of the state imports a proper appointment where the original record is not attacked.[51]

Where the attorney general directs the solicitor of one district to prosecute cases in another, no written order is required to show the authority of such visiting solicitor.[52]

Termination of employment. Where there is no statutory provision to the contrary, an assistant attorney general may be discharged with the same freedom that a private client may exercise in such a matter,[53] subject, of course, to the right of such counsel to compensation;[54] but, where a special assistant attorney general has brought suit, it has been held that he cannot be supplanted as counsel of record until a written notice has been filed and the consent of the court obtained.[55]

Authority and powers. Where special counsel are lawfully employed, they may use the attorney general's name in connection with all litigation,[56] and all things done under such employment are to be considered as the act of the attorney general.[57] Moreover, it has been held that, since an assistant attorney general is merely the agent of the attorney general, he can act only in the name of his principal.[58]

Under a statute authorizing the deputy attorney general to serve instead of the attorney general on all boards and commissions of which the latter is an ex officio member, the deputy attorney general may serve on the state loan board.[59]

Authority necessarily implied from power to appoint

The attorney general has ample authority to appoint special counsel indefinitely, or for a limited time, or for a particular purpose, or a designated proceeding, and with any restrictions or limitations which he may see fit to impose as to the manner of service or compensation to be paid, and it necessarily follows that he may dismiss or discontinue the service of any such special appointees.—State v. 59. Chemical Bank & Trust Co. v. Oakland County, 251 N.W. 395, 264 Mich. 673.

"Ex officio services," which the deputy attorney general may perform in place of the attorney general, are services imposed by law on a public officer by virtue of his office and relating to the public interests or business of the county or state.

An admission of service and appearance of the attorney general by a deputy will be deemed sufficient, even where unauthorized, on the ground of public policy.[60]

The duties of an assistant attorney general are, where so limited by statute, confined to the county in which he is appointed.[61]

Effect of representation by unauthorized counsel. Suits brought by special counsel who are not duly authorized should be dismissed.[62] Where, however, the suit is brought by the attorney general, but prosecuted by unauthorized counsel, this does not warrant dismissal, because counsel may voluntarily serve the state without expense to it.[63]

Substitutes. When so provided by law, a substitute may be appointed to act in the absence or disqualification of the attorney-general.[64]

b. Federal Officers

Under the federal statute, provision is made for deputies and assistants to the attorney general and for their appointment and qualification.

The office of solicitor general in the department of justice is created by federal statute [Rev.St. § 347; U.S.C.A. tit 5 c 5 § 293], and it is provided that in case of a vacancy in the office of attorney general or of his absence or disability the solicitor general shall have power to exercise all the duties of that office.[65] Provision is also made by the federal statutes [Rev.St. § 348; U.S.C.A. tit 5 c 5 § 295], for the appointment by the president with the advice and consent of the senate of officers designated "assistant attorneys general" who shall assist the attorney general and solicitor general in the performance of their duties,[66] and also by the Act of Congress of March 3, 1903, chapter 1006 [U S C A. tit 5 c 5 § 294] for the appointment of an assistant to the attorney general and by the Act of Congress of June 10, 1890 [U.S.C.A. tit 5 c 5 § 296] for an assistant attorney general in charge of customs matters, these officers likewise being appointed by the president with the advice and consent of the senate. As will be seen in the title District and Prosecuting Attorneys § 27 [18 C J. p 1336 notes 32–34], provision is also made for the appointment of special assistants to any of the district attorneys.

Appointment. The statute conferring upon the attorney general the power to appoint special assistants does not require that the appointment shall in all cases be signed by the attorney general himself but the power may be exercised personally or through his lawful assistants when duly authorized for that purpose,[67] and where the special attorney bases his authority to act as such upon a letter signed by the assistant attorney general for the attorney general, and purporting upon its face to have been from the department of justice and from the attorney general, the special assistant is in the status of a de facto officer acting under color of authority.[68] It is not necessary that an appointment of a special assistant shall be drawn up with the technical accuracy required in pleadings and other legal documents,[69] and it has been held that the designation of a special assistant to a federal district attorney by one who was solicitor general, but who signed the commission as acting attorney general, is sufficient because of the fact that the solicitor general is authorized to act as attorney general in the absence of such official.[70] However, in view of the provision that special assistants "may, when thereunto specifically directed by the attorney general" conduct certain proceedings, the letter of appointment must state the specific proceedings which the assistant is authorized to prosecute.[71] A direction is sufficiently specific where it directs proceedings against named persons for infractions of specified statutes, although the interrelation of the parties is not revealed.[72]

The authorization of a special federal assistant need not be for one district, but may be for two or more.[73]

Eligibility and qualifications. The authorization to appoint "any attorney or counselor" as special assistant to the attorney general permits the appointment of one admitted to the county bar of a state, although he is not a member of the bar of the supreme court of that state or of the United States,[74] and, if the appointee is a member of the bar of one state, he may be appointed to act in another state.[75]

Counsel representing another branch of the government and receiving compensation solely from such other branch of government are not thereby rendered ineligible as special assistants to the attorney general.[76]

Where private as well as public rights are involved, the employment of counsel, who has previously represented the private interests, as an assistant to the attorney general of the United States, is discretionary with the attorney general.[77] If the object of the United States and that of the private party are one and the same, there is no objection to such appointment.[78] On the other hand, if the name and authority of the United States are likely to be perverted to the promotion of an exclusively private interest, the appointment of such private counsel may be improper.[79]

Where a claim prosecuted below by another was assigned to the United States pending appeal, counsel for the assignor may be appointed special assistants to the attorney general of the United States for the purposes of appeal in the same case.[80]

Evidence and proof of authority. The appointment of an assistant will be presumed to have been made regularly and according to law.[81] The presumption will be that where an act is done by the solicitor general as "acting attorney general" that it was done in the absence of the attorney general[82] and the fact that a writing evidencing his act is signed as "acting attorney general" and not as "solicitor general" is not material.[83] Where an assistant attorney general signs a communication for and on behalf of the attorney general, it must be presumed that he was acting lawfully and not usurping authority.[84]

The federal courts will take judicial notice of the incumbent of the office of the solicitor general of the United States.[85] A specially appointed assistant to the attorney general who is not a resident of the federal district wherein a prosecution is pending should present duly certified copies of his appointment and oath of office to any court in which he is called upon to act in order that the same may be placed upon the records of the court.[86]

Authority. It is essential that every suit be brought with the attorney general's approval,[87] and, where an action is instituted by an assistant

Counsel for the Emergency Fleet Corporation

(1) The facts that the special federal assistant was counsel for the Emergency Fleet Corporation, was paid as such, and received no additional compensation for his new duties, does not render him ineligible as a special assistant—Yaselli v. Goff, (C.C.A.N.Y.) 12 F.(2d) 396, 56 A.L.R. 1239, affirming (D.C.) 8 F.(2d) 161, certiorari granted 47 S.Ct. 101, 273 U.S. 677, 71 L.Ed. 835, and affirmed 48 S.Ct. 155, 275 U.S. 503, 72 L.Ed. 395—U. S. v. Morse, (D.C.N.Y.) 292 F. 273, 277.

(2) "There is no provision of law requiring a Special Assistant to the Attorney General to be paid out of funds appropriated for the Department of Justice. Even if he was paid out of the funds of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, those funds belonged in equity to the United States, and his employment and pay cannot be regarded as by a private corporation. That corporation, though not exempt, like the United States, from liability except by virtue of special statutes, is in a substantial sense a governmental agency, and its property under the Merchant Marine Act of 1920 (41 Stat. 988), was transferred to the government. While by the decision in United States v. Strang, 41 S.Ct. 165, 254 U.S. 494, 65 L.Ed. 368, an employee of the Emergency Fleet Corporation was held not to be an officer of the United States, so as to subject him to a criminal statute, such a case did not in my opinion involve the conclusion that the Emergency Fleet Corporation is so absolutely a private corporation that its funds, though belonging to the United States, could not be used to pay an Assistant Attorney General for prosecuting crimes alleged to have arisen out of transactions affecting its operations."—U. and it is not brought in the name of, and is not signed by, the attorney general, the pleadings should ordinarily state that the action is authorized by the attorney general, although this may be a matter of proof.[88]

In view of the statutory provision that special assistants to the attorney general of the United States may, when thereunto specifically directed, conduct certain proceedings, the assistant may conduct any proceeding named in the instrument of appointment, but no other.[89]

Stenographers. The attorney-general of the United States has power to authorize the employment by the district attorney of a stenographer to assist in preparing indictments.[90]

§ 4. Compensation

a. Of attorney general
b. Of assistants

a. Of Attorney General

The attorney general's compensation is to be determined in accordance with applicable constitutional and statutory provisions.

The compensation of an attorney general is now almost universally regulated by statute Where a salary is prescribed, it may, in the absence of any constitutional limitation, be made smaller during his term.[91] However, where the constitution provides that the attorney general shall receive such compensation as is provided by the legislature, it may be that the court can require a suitable compensation,[92] and it is certain that, where a salary is prescribed by the legislature, it cannot thereafter be withheld by the legislature for a debt due the state,[93] especially where the attorney general is deprived of the right to a trial by jury to determine the amount of the alleged indebtedness.[94]

If the statutes so provide, the compensation of the attorney general may consist of a salary,[95] commissions on amounts collected,[96] or fees,[97] or salary and fees,[98] but he is not entitled to fees in addition to a salary where only a salary is permitted by law.[99]

Assuming that a statute giving the attorney general a commission on increases in taxes compelled by him is constitutional, the attorney general cannot be allowed such commissions by an order in the action brought to secure an increase in such taxes where he is not a party to the suit, and where the pleadings fail to request allowance of such commissions,[1] and it has been held that the interests of the attorney general and of the state and county are inconsistent, and that therefore a judgment awarding such compensation could not be entered, even if he were a party to the action.[2] Where there are several tax claims, and they have been compromised by reducing some and increasing others, the commissions are based on the net increase obtained by the attorney general after deducting the total reductions from the total increases.[3]

Extra services. Where, at the bidding of the legislature, the attorney general performs services not incumbent on him by virtue of his office, the legislature may give him additional compensation therefor.[4]

Salary not liable to set off or legal process

It is not liable to attachment nor to be garnisheed, nor to assignment in bankruptcy, and, upon principles of public policy, it has absolute immunity from detention for debt or counter-claim" —Blair v. Duties for which salary allowed

(1) Even if duty which the anti-trust statute purports to impose on the attorney general is not identical with duty which he already possessed at common law, it is of the same general character, and therefore within the scope of the services which "may be prescribed by law," within Const. art 5, § 1, providing the services he shall perform, and for the performance of which § 24 provides he shall be allowed a salary, and no other compensation; so that the provision of the anti-trust statute for his having fees cannot be sustained on the theory that his duties under that statute in no way pertain to the office of attorney general—State ex rel Barrett v Boeckeler Lumber Co., 257 S.W. 453, 302 Mo 187.

Furnishing opinions

A statute providing extra compensation for the attorney general for extra duties of furnishing opinions to county officers, thereby imposed on him is valid as against the objection that the constitution forbids

Reimbursement for expenditures. When the attorney general is provided quarters in the capitol building and he rents quarters elsewhere, he is not entitled to reimbursement for such expenditure.[5]

b. Of Assistants

Special assistant attorney generals or other assistants to the attorney general are entitled to compensation only as prescribed by law.

Special assistants employed by the attorney general are entitled to compensation only under the conditions prescribed by law,[6] and they are entitled to no compensation where their employment was unauthorized,[7] unless the same is subsequently ratified.[8] Such an assistant is not entitled to receive compensation for his services prior to the date of his appointment,[9] nor can an appointment be made retroactive so as to cover a period of service not embraced in the original appointment.[10]

Agreement for retainer. Under a constitutional provision that state officers must be paid salaries and not fees, it is illegal to pay an assistant attorney general a retainer of a fixed sum payable regardless of whether any services are actually performed by the officer and in addition to a regular periodical salary and expenses;[11] but an assistant attorney general who is a state officer may resign his position and thereafter be employed as an assistant to the attorney general and as such may be paid a retainer or fee,[12] and the fact that the contract of employment runs beyond the attorney general's term of office is no defense to an action for that part of the retainer due for services which may be performed during the term of office.[13]

Quantum meruit. The fair and reasonable value of his services may be awarded to an assistant or counsel employed for a specific purpose in the absence of an express contract or legislative appropriation fixing the amount thereof.[14] increasing or diminishing an official's salary during an officer's term of office—Taylor v Davis, 102 So. 433, 212 Ala 282, 40 A L R 1052.

New office

Where the constitution limits the attorney general's compensation to a stated salary, a statute granting him compensation as a member of the securities commission is not unconstitutional, the two offices being distinct—State v. Reeves, 184 N W 1007, 44 S D 612.

Allowance for expenses

(1) Under a statute permitting the attorney general to supersede a county attorney in contesting claims and preventing waste of the estate of an intestate leaving no known heirs, it was held that the special assistants appointed to contest claims against the estate of the intestate were entitled to an allowance for expenses although the statute did not expressly so provide—Hauser v. Doyle's Estate, (Kan.) 56 P (2d) 1217.

(2) In such case it is the duty of the attorney general so to conduct inquiries and examination required of him by the statute that expense may be kept at a minimum—Hauser v Doyle's Estate, 59 P (2d) 674, 144 Kan 1, denying rehearing 56 P (2d) 1217, 143 Kan 719

Compensation from funds in court

Notwithstanding, under L §§ 2769–2779 (L [1921] p 476), the attorney general is not required to represent the state in proceedings relating to a public charity, in view of L § 2773, imposing on the attorney general powers incident to that office at common law, among which is the enforcement of public charities and L (1921) p 476, authorizing him to appoint assistants at annual salaries only, which under § 2978 shall be in lieu of all other salaries and fees, such statutes and acts prohibit an allowance, out of funds in court, of fees to a special attorney appointed by the attorney general to intervene and represent the public interest in a suit between private litigants involving the ownership of the property included in a charitable trust—Wemme v First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Portland, 223 P 250, 110 Or 179, denying motion 219 P. 618, 110 Or 179

Statute held not retroactive

Where a deputy was granted an increase in salary by statute, but an appropriation was made in the general appropriation bill for an entire year, a portion of which had elapsed prior to the enactment of the statute granting the increase, it was held that such increase was not retroactive merely because of the appropriation—State v Eggers, 33 N W. 535, 112 P 699

Stipulation by attorney general

Under a statute providing that the attorney general may stipulate the amount of compensation to be paid to special assistants, the amount fixed by him is conclusive—Garter v U. S., 31 Ct Cl. 334, affirmed U S v Garter, 18 S Ct. 703, 170 U S 527, 42 L Ed. 1133

On discharge of counsel before duties performed in full

(1) Where the governor of the state discharges special counsel employed on a contingent basis, the measure of compensation to which the attorneys are entitled should be on a quantum meruit basis and should be the value of the services rendered from the date of the contract until their discharge—Gordon v. Morrow, 218 S W. 258, 186 Ky. 713.

(2) Where the attorney general appointed a special counsel for the director of public welfare in a proceeding for the removal of a matron of a girls' industrial school, expressly stating that the appointment was merely for the purpose of allowing counsel to represent the director, and, after counsel had entered on his duties, informed the director that the state would not be liable for fees, it was held that counsel, having theretofore performed services, was entitled to be paid the fair and reasonable value thereof—State v Crabbe, 143 N E 189, 109 Ohio St 623

Performance of services. Under a statute providing a monthly salary and contemplating actual rendition of service, an assistant attorney general is not entitled to compensation where his cases have been continued for a year by agreement.[15]

Enforcing payment. Special assistants have no attorney's lien on funds recovered for the state to secure their compensation, by reason of the general statute providing a lien for attorneys at law,[16] but they must pay the money into the treasury and resort to legal process to recover their compensation.[17] If special counsel are discharged without cause, they need not appeal to the legislature for permission to sue the state for their compensation[18] but may request the trial judge to award a reasonable fee on the state's motion to substitute counsel.[19]

Recovery of unauthorized payment. Compensation paid a disqualified assistant who is not a de facto officer may be recovered by the state notwithstanding the actual, faithful, and effective rendition of services.[20]

§ 5. Powers and Duties in General

The powers and duties of attorneys general are primarily executive and administrative and consist in those expressly or impliedly conferred by constitutional or statutory provisions together with, in the absence of express exclusion thereof, the powers attached to the office at common law.

The office of attorney general has existed from an early period, both in England and in this country, and is vested by the common law with a great variety of duties in the administration of the government.[21] The duties are so numerous and varied that it has not been the policy of the legislatures of the states of this country to attempt specifically to enumerate them; and where the question has come up for consideration, it is generally held that the office is clothed, in addition to the duties expressly defined by statute, with all the power pertaining thereto under the common law.[22] Conversely, where the constitution and statutes do not require certain duties, and the duty was unknown at common law, the attorney general has no duty to perform acts for the state merely because they require legal skill.[23] A grant by statute of the same or other powers does not operate to deprive the attorney general of those belonging to the office under the common law,[24] unless the statute, either expressly or by reasonable intendment, forbids the exercise of powers not thus expressly conferred.[25] As the chief law officer of the state, the attorney general may, in the absence of some express legislative restriction to the contrary, exercise all such power and authority as public interests may from time to time require.[26]

On the other hand, it is to be noted that in some states the office is regarded as of statutory origin, and that the rights and duties attendant thereto are conferred, defined, and described by statute,[27] and where the constitution provides that the treasurer of state, secretary of state, auditor of state, and attorney general shall perform such duties as may be prescribed by law, it has been held that the attorney general has no power in the absence of a statute.[28]

Nature of duties or powers. The attorney general of a state, being regarded as its chief law officer, is, as such, subject only to the direction of the governor and of the legislature.[29] Duties of the attorney general pertain to the executive or administrative branch of the government,[30] and, since the functions of the executive, legislative, and judicial departments must be exercised separately by the appropriate division of government, the attorney general cannot exercise any power or possess any function essentially judicial in nature.[31] However, in the exercise of the functions incident to his office, an attorney general is endowed with a large discretion over matters of public concern[32] and the exercise of such discretion is in its nature a judicial act over which the courts have no control[33] although the courts may control him as to the exercise of his mandatory duties.[34]

Delegation of duties or powers. While it has been stated broadly that any duties which the attorney general may perform personally may be performed by his regularly authorized assistants,[35] this rule would seem to be qualified by the rule that duties involving the exercise of discretion and judgment for the public good cannot be delegated but must be performed in person[36] although the qualifying rule requires only that the official shall exercise some judgment and discretion on matters which are committed to him for determination and does not inhibit his use of assistants when the act to be done requires examination or inspection of documents or physical objects[37] or prohibit the official from arriving at a conclusion of fact which is based on the report of an assistant.[38]

Alteration of duties or powers. Subject to constitutional limitations, it is within the power of the legislature to increase, alter, or abridge the powers and duties of the attorney-general,[39] and a constitutional requirement that the attorney general shall have such duties as are prescribed by law in no way prohibits the legislature from adding to his duties from time to time.[40]

Powers conferred by positive provisions of statute cannot be varied or enlarged by usage[41]

Powers after expiration of term. The authority of the attorney-general terminates with his term of office,[42] and any duty pertaining to the office, and not to the person who claims to be the incumbent, devolves upon his successor[43] who may act without causing himself to be substituted on the record.[44]

Power to bind successor. The attorney-general has not such authority as will enable him to bind a succeeding attorney general not to bring an action,[45] or not to take an appeal,[46] where the latter believes it to be for the interest of the state so to do.

Attorney general of United States. The attorney general of the United States has the authority, and it is made his duty, to supervise the conduct of all suits brought by or against the United States and to give advice to the president and the heads of the other departments of the government[47] He acts as the head of one of the executive departments representing the authority of the president in the class of subjects within the domain of that department and under his control[48]

§ 6. Furnishing Opinions

The attorney general is bound, both at common law and under the statutes, to render advice and opinions as to questions of law arising with relation to matters affecting the executive departments of the government.

In many of the states it is made the duty of the attorney general to advise, upon request, the governor of the state and the various state department heads and other officers as to legal questions concerning their official conduct,[49] and as a rule the giving of opinions will be refused except as provided for by constitutional or statutory requirements[50] Under the federal statutes [Rev St. §§ 354, 356–358, 383; U S C.A. tit 5 c 5 §§ 303–308], it is made the duty of the attorney general to give his advice and opinion upon questions of law whenever required by the president and to the heads of any executive department on questions of law arising in the administration of their departments, and in general the attorney general is not required to give opinions in other cases.[51] Further provision is made for the publication of such opinions and for the giving of legal advice to the war and navy departments and for the reference of questions to subordinates.

Under some statutes it is made the duty of state officers or departments, boards, or commissions of the state government, where they require legal advice concerning their conduct or operation or when any legal difficulty or dispute has arisen or litiga-

Police commissioners

Under a statute making it the duty of the attorney general to advise all state boards and commissions, it was held that the attorney general must advise a local board of police commissioners appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the senate, the court saying, "when the mob rages in the streets, when the incendiary and the assassin are at work, they do not offend against the city, but against the state When they are detected and arrested, it is by the chief of police and his subordinates, under the authority of the state, and, when they are tried and convicted, it is by officers representing the state and her sovereign power . . . It must be conceded that the words 'state boards and commissions' are broad enough to include the board in question, nor could the contrary contention be successfully maintained Undoubtedly the specific question which arises here was not before the legislature when chapter 17, Gen Laws, was enacted, for this police commission was not then in existence, but it would be difficult to frame an expression more comprehensive in its terms than 'all state boards and commissions' if it had been then in existence"—In re Police Com'rs, 49 A. 36, 37, 22 R I 654.

Heads of departments

It is the rule to give opinions only to the heads of the departments of the state government and not to the employees—In re Retirement of State Employees, 28 Pa Dist. 393.

Settlement of claim

Under a general statute requiring the attorney general to give his opinion to the executive and to the heads of the several executive departments on constitutional or other legal questions that may concern the official actions of such officers, he may advise the state treasurer to make a settlement of the state's claim against an insolvent bank—State ex rel. tion has been commenced, to refer the matter to the attorney general, and when any such officer or board has requested and received legal advice concerning an official duty, he is required to follow the same and, if he has done so, is absolved from liability for so doing.[52] Such a statute is not unconstitutional in so far as it may change the powers and duties of other state officers which are subject to legislative control.[53] It is not applicable to questions which involve the constitutionality of a statute affecting an officer's official duties[54] and is confined to administrative questions of a legal nature affecting the harmony which should exist between two or more of the executive departments of the state, or doubtful legal questions not theretofore passed upon by the courts or the attorney general which affect any state officer's performance of his official duties, or proceedings which have resulted, or likely will result, in litigation in which the state is interested,[55] but as to matters within its scope it is compulsory.[56]

An officer who has sought an opinion from the attorney general should, it would seem, even though not compelled to do so by statute, follow the advice which is given to him,[57] and when he does so in good faith, he is not, according to some authorities, personally liable to the state[58] and the sureties upon his official bond are also absolved.[59] However, it has been held to the contrary that the officer and the sureties upon his official bond are not protected by the fact that the officer's act was in accordance with an official opinion of the attorney general.[60]

§ 7. Representing State or United States

The attorney general is the chief representative in legal proceedings of the state or of the United States, as the case may be.

As has been seen in § 1, the office of attorney general in the United States, both under the federal and the state governments, has its counterpart in English law, under which the attorney general is the chief legal representative of the crown. Hence, as will be considered more in detail in the following sections, the attorney general of the state appears for and in behalf of the state in all suits or prosecutions, criminal or civil, in which the state may be a party or interested,[61] and, although the federal statutes providing for the duties of the attorney general of the United States are very general in their terms, he is undoubtedly the officer who has charge of the institution and conduct of the pleas of the United States and of the litigation which is necessary to establish the rights of the government.[62] Where such an officer appears before the court, he appears as an officer discharging his duty of representing the state or a public body before the court; he does not appear as an attorney at law or as an attorney employed in the case but is exercising the functions imposed on him by law.[63]

The attorney general cannot assent to,[64] or ratify,[65] anything which lies within the exclusive province of the legislature.

Testing constitutionality of statute. Where an attempt is made to sue the state under a statute purporting to waive the immunity of a state government or of an agency which forms a component part thereof from suit, the attorney general may, by an application for a writ of prohibition, raise the question of the constitutionality of the statute.[66] Further, where an adjudication of the unconstitutionality of a statute which is sought by a private relator will seriously affect the general public, it is proper for the attorney general to appear therein as the representative of the people, who in the ag-

Assent to claim under statute

Where a claim is made under a statute which may extend the life of a railroad charter, the attorney general cannot intervene and assent to the claim of extension, the extended life of the railroad depending solely on the will of the legislature.—New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. New Orleans, 34 La.Ann. 429.

65. Van Dyke v. State, 24 Ala. 81

Payment to unauthorized agent

Where a payment of taxes was made to the comptroller rather than the treasurer, the attorney general could not ratify the payment by bringing suit against the comptroller, the sole right being in the legislature to designate an agent to receive taxes.—Van Dyke v State, 21 Ala. 81.

gregate constitute the state.[67] The attorney general, notwithstanding the legislature has called upon him to bring an action to test the constitutionality of a statute, has, however, been held to have no standing in court to do so where he is in effect seeking a merely declaratory judgment not within the jurisdiction of the court,[68] although where an action to determine the validity of a statute is brought under a declaratory judgment statute the attorney general of the state is properly made a party.[69]

Investigations. Under a statute conferring the right upon the attorney general with the approval and direction of the governor to inquire into matters concerning the public peace, safety, and justice, it does not authorize a special investigation against an individual for the purpose of obtaining evidence that he was guilty of a specific crime[70] although such an investigation may be authorized where it is for the purpose of advising executive action on the part of the governor.[71]

Settlement or compromise of claims. It has been held that the attorney general has power to compromise and settle a suit when the rights of the state are in doubt and are in honest dispute,[72] especially when he acts with the approval of the executive head of the department having charge of the matter involved in litigation;[73] but it has also been held that there is no common-law power to settle for less than the face value of a tax execution,[74] and that an execution on a judgment which has become final cannot be compromised by accepting less than the amount awarded.[75]

a. In General

The attorney general, as the chief legal representative of the state, may institute all legal proceedings necessary to protect the interests of the state, and may defend all actions affecting the public interest.

As the chief law officer of the state, the attorney general may, in the absence of some express legislative restriction to the contrary, exercise all such power and authority as public interests may from time to time require. He may institute, conduct, and maintain all such suits and proceedings as he deems necessary for the enforcement of the laws, the preservation of order, and the protection of public rights.[76] He is also generally charged by

Conviction of homicide

Where a person was found dead, and one of the plaintiffs, through his counsel, admitted that he had killed decedent in self-defense, but a prosecution against him had been dismissed because of insufficient evidence, an investigation by the attorney general by direction of the governor, for the purpose of securing evidence to break down that plaintiff's claim of justifiable homicide did not affect the "public peace, public safety, and public justice," within Executive L. § 62 subd. 8, added by L. (1917) c. 595, authorizing the attorney general, with the approval of the governor, to inquire into matters concerning the public peace, public safety, and public justice, by subpœnaing and examining witnesses, hence such an investigation was unauthorized, in view of Const. art. 1, § 6, and Code Cr.Proc. §§ 183, 189, 190, 196, 205, 245, 256, 264, 265, 266, 952-p.—Ward Baking Co. v. Superseding district attorney

Where an indictment for murder was dismissed because of lack of evidence, but there was no proof that the district attorney had failed to perform his duty, an investigation of the crime by the attorney general, pursuant to governor's directions, to secure evidence against defendant, cannot be upheld on the theory that it was carried on for the purpose of furnishing the governor with information, so that he might properly be advised whether to use his executive power to supersede the district attorney and designate the attorney general in his place to prosecute before the grand jury.—Ward Baking Co. v. law with the duty of representing the people of the state in all cases in which the state is a party or is interested,[77] or in which the wrong or injury complained of affects the public generally.[78] He may maintain an action in such case, even though he is not required to do so unless other officers whose duty it is to sue have not done so.[79]

He is ordinarily neither authorized nor required to sue or to defend on behalf of a municipality,[80] or county.[81]

He may not maintain an action solely for the vindication of private rights or for the redress of private grievances in which the public has no interest,[82] but in a case involving the public as well as a private interest, the attorney general may maintain or defend an action or proceeding with respect to the public interest.[83]

Limitation of right. In some states the duties of the attorney general are limited by statute to state cases pending or instituted in the supreme court, and in such case he is not obliged to appear in inferior courts unless required to do so by the governor or legislature.[84]

Statutes requiring the attorney general to pros-

Statute authorizing governor to cause suits to be brought for recovery of public funds does not conflict with statute authorizing attorney general to institute suits for protection of rights of state—Montgomery v Sparks, 142 So 769, 225 Ala 343

Representing agencies of state

(1) The constitutional duty of the attorney general to represent the interest of the state does not extend to a duty to represent the state highway commission or a levee district where they may sue in their own name and are separate corporate entities, but extends only to the interest of the state where it may sue or be sued in its own name—Saint v. Allen, 134 So. 246, 172 La. 350

(2) A resolution authorizing the attorney general to investigate a matter and report to the governor cannot be construed as authorizing a suit in the name of the state where the true party is a levee district—State v Standard Oil Co of Louisiana, 113 So 867, 164 La 334

(3) A right to sue in the name of the state on state causes of action, or to sue in the name of a levee board on their causes of action does not give the attorney general the right to sue in the name of the state on a levee board's cause of action—State v Standard Oil Co of Louisiana, supra.

State Board of Equalization, 249 P. 996, 140 Wash. 433.

(2) Under a statutory provision requiring the attorney general to institute and prosecute actions which may be necessary to the execution of the duties of any state officer, when it has been made the duty of a particular state board to levy certain taxes, it would seem that it is the duty of the attorney general to institute and prosecute such actions as may be necessary to see that those duties are properly performed—State v State Board of Equalization, supra.

ecute cases in the lower courts "when" requested by the governor mean "if" or "in case" so requested,[85] and refer to both civil and criminal cases.[86]

The fact that a suit in the name of the state is instituted or conducted by the attorney general is generally sufficient to show that the suit is authorized by the state,[87] even though the attorney general is prohibited from bringing the particular suit unless advised to do so by certain other officers.[88]

Power to bind state. In the absence of statutory authority the attorney-general has no power to enter the appearance of the state for the purpose of bringing it in as a party defendant to a pending action;[89] and, where he is specially authorized to bring certain actions, he can bind the state only in cases similar to those so authorized.[90]

The fact that a statute authorizes the attorney general to appear for the state and defend in any court any cause or matter in which the state may be a party or interested has been held not to authorize him to waive immunity to suit and appear for the state in a suit against it in the federal courts,[91] but a similar statute has also been held to constitute "a waiver of the rights of the state not to be sued without its consent" so that the attorney general was authorized to appear, not merely to object to jurisdiction, but to defend the action on its merits,[92] and it has also been held that the action of the attorney general in trying a case at the instance of the auditor general, and appealing and arguing the same before the supreme court of the United States constituted a waiver by the state of immunity.[93]

The attorney general cannot bind the state by oral stipulations where a statute provides that an attorney may bind his client in a case by an agreement filed with the clerk or entered on the minutes but not otherwise,[94]

Attorney general of the United States. While there is no express authority empowering the attorney general to bring suits generally in the name of the United States, such power is to be inferred from the intent of the entire chapter relating to the department of justice,[95] so, although the act creating circuit courts of appeal is silent, the control of cases in them comes within the general jurisdiction of the attorney general as head of that department.[96]

The initiation and control of a suit by the United States to set aside a patent for land issued on the ground that it was obtained by fraud or mistake lie with the attorney general as the head of one of the executive departments.[97]

If it appears that substantial rights of the United States may be impaired in a suit between states, but that the United States cannot properly become a party to the suit, the attorney general may be permitted to appear and intervene on motion for the purpose of adducing evidence and making an argument, without attempting to make the United States a party subject to orders of court, but he will not be permitted to interfere in the pleadings, evidence, or admissions of the states.[98]

The United States attorney general is not authorized to make the United States a party defendant in any court,[99] and counsel for the United States cannot waive any right inherent in sovereignty.[1]

Consent to taxation of costs

It is a prerogative of the United States not to be bound for costs, and the consent of the attorney general to an order to pay the costs of printing the transcript will not bind

b. Conflicting Interests

Between conflicting duties and interests the attorney general should choose that duty or interest most closely identified with the public good

While it has been held that, where the action to be entertained to determine the validity of a statute must be brought against one of the departments of the state of which the attorney general is legal adviser as well as of the legislature, for the legislature to require him to maintain the action would be to place him in a position repugnant to his other official duties,[2] where the attorney general is charged with the duty of requiring performance by state officials or bodies of their duties, this duty is not overcome by a conflicting requirement that he shall represent such officials or bodies in court proceedings, but the duty to prosecute overcomes the duty to represent[3] Where it is provided by statute that an injured employee shall be represented in the supreme court by the attorney general in a proceeding for workmen's compensation, but the attorney general also represents the state treasurer in all cases, it has been held that the compensation claimant's right to the services of the attorney general must yield to the state treasurer's right where the two interests are in conflict[4]

Where there is a conflict of authority between the attorney general and the state auditor, the rule is that, where the determinative factor is a question of law, the attorney general has jurisdiction, whereas a mere question of fact may be settled or judicially determined at the instance of the auditor without recourse to the attorney general[5]

Where an application to prohibit wrongful acts would ordinarily be made by the attorney general, but he is alleged to be the wrongdoer, the court may entertain the petition of parties interested without the consent of such attorney general.[6]

c. Exclusiveness of Right

The exclusiveness of the authority of the attorney general depends on the particular constitutional or statutory provision involved.

As a general rule the authority of the attorney general under constitutional and statutory provisions to represent the state with regard to matters of public interest is exclusive[7] although in the absence of a constitutional restriction the legislature may provide special counsel for the state or any of its boards or officers who may act independently and not under the control of the attorney general.[8]

It is also held that, in the absence of a statute, the right to defend a state officer is not exclusive with the attorney general, and such officer may be represented by other counsel;[9] but where a statute makes it unlawful to employ counsel for the state without the written approval of the attorney general, it has been held that, while the employment of private counsel by the officers is proper for the purpose of presenting their views,[10] they cannot file an appearance or control the litigation.[11]

A statute requiring representation of the state or county in cases in which they are interested by the attorney general or person authorized by the court refers only to court cases, and does not bar the appointment of special counsel as advisers by an executive department[12]

Supervision of judgments. Under a statute providing that in actions of a certain class no judgment or final order shall be entered until the entry shall have been submitted to the attorney general, a judgment entered without such submission is voidable but not void,[13] although it has been also held that the requirement is mandatory and, if ignored and judgment is entered, it cannot be reviewed.[14]

d. Conduct and Management of Cause

The attorney general ordinarily exercises complete control over all litigation conducted in his name.

In the absence of explicit legislative expression to the contrary, the attorney general possesses entire dominion over every suit instituted by him in his official capacity whether or not there is a relator.[15]

It has been held that, when the state has no direct interest in the event of the suit, the attorney general, as such, has no power to control the conduct thereof,[16] or to withdraw his consent, given to the parties interested, to the use of the name of the state and of his name in bringing an action when such withdrawal would prejudice the parties interested.[17] However, where a suit by a private party against the attorney general and another was consolidated with a suit on the relation of such other against the private party relating to the same subject matter, the attorney general could stipulate, as a defendant, that the effective date of a decree in the consolidated action should be postponed, although the relator in the other suit failed to assent thereto, where his interest was the same as the public interest.[18]

The correlative of the rule that the attorney general may conduct the litigation of a state as may counsel for a private litigant is that the state is bound by the neglect or default of the attorney general to the same extent as a private party.[19]

Appearance. In the United States supreme court it is the uniform practice of the clerk to enter the appearance of the attorney general of the United States in cases in which the United States is a party at the first term to which any writ of error or appeal is returnable. This practice is not conclusive against the attorney general if, at the first term, he withdraws his appearance or moves to strike it off; but, if he lets it pass for one term, it is conclusive upon him as to an appearance.[20]

Dismissal, discontinuance, or disposition. As an incident of his control, the attorney general has power to dismiss or to discontinue suits brought by him,[21] either with or without a stipulation by the other party,[22] and to make any disposition of such suits that he deems best for the interest of the state.[23]

The United States attorney general may absolutely dismiss or discontinue suits in which the government is interested.[24] A fortiori, he may terminate the same upon terms at any stage by way of compromise or settlement.[25]

Pleadings and parties. Where an action is brought by the attorney general on the relation of another, the latter need not be joined as plaintiff unless the action is substantially for his benefit.[26] Where the consent of the court to the maintenance of an action by the people by the attorney general is necessary, the consent is a condition precedent, and must be alleged and proved.[27]

Appeal. Unless otherwise provided by statute, the attorney general is the only person who is authorized by law to appear for the people in the supreme court,[28] and no other attorney appearing without his consent will be recognized.[29] Where the state has instituted an action on the relation of citizens, and the attorney has thereafter intervened to protect the state's interest in the same subject matter, the attorney general's failure to take an appeal cannot prejudice the rights of the relators to an appeal, their interests being direct and the state's incidental.[30]

Termination of authority. Special counsel appointed by the attorney general and the attorney general himself have the right to proceed with cases pending at the time of passage of an act transferring cases of a particular class to the control of another specified state officer where, by a general statute, it is provided that no pending action shall be affected by the repeal of a statute but shall proceed as if the statute had not been repealed.[31]

Effect of election of new attorney general. The election of a new attorney general pending the trial of a case does not require the successor to be substituted as counsel of record, and consequently does not justify the court in striking a cause from the calendar a cause noticed for trial by the successor.[32]

e. Informations in Civil Cases

(1) At law
(2) In equity

(1) At Law

An information in a civil case at law is an ancient form of practice whereby the sovereign sues for damages or debts due him.

An information in civil cases is an ancient form of practice whereby a suit was filed by the attorney general, or other proper officer, on behalf of the government to recover money or other charges, or to obtain satisfaction in damages for any personal wrong committed on the lands or other possessions of the government.[33] An "information" and a "complaint" are regarded as synonymous,[34] a complaint preferred on behalf of the state in a civil action being usually termed an "information."[35]

One form of this remedy is an information in debt upon any contract for moneys due to the government or for any forfeit due to the government from the breach of a penal statute.[36]

(a) Definition and Nature

A proceeding in equity by the state on its behalf or on behalf of one under the protection of the state is begun by information and not by petition and prayer.

its protection, such as the objects of public charities, as considered in the title Charities § 60 [11 C.J. p 368 note 66], the matter of complaint is offered to the court, not by way of petition, but by way of information by the attorney general or other proper law officer of such government.[37] It is a legal proceeding in chancery, older than the court of equity, whose equitable powers, when acquired, were termed extraordinary to distinguish them from its ordinary or legal jurisdiction.[38]

By such information the attorney general as official representative of the government undertakes to put the court in possession of facts which when communicated in proper form, through the right official channel, imposes upon the court determinate duties.[39] The attorney general does not take the attitude nor hold the language of an ordinary suitor; he is not a complainant, nor does he petition.[40]

The function of an information is the same as a bill in equity, and it in every respect follows the nature of a bill except as to name and form.[41]

(b) Information and Bill

Where an individual has an interest in the subject matter of the information, he may have his bill joined with such information, and they form what is known as "an information and bill."

Where a private individual has an interest in the matter in dispute in connection with the government, of an injury to which interest he has a right to complain, apart from the government, he may have his personal complaint or bill joined to, and incorporated with, the information of the attorney general, and they form together an information and bill.[42] In a suit by information and bill, unless the bill is not incorporated with the information, the relator sustains both the character of plaintiff and relator,[43] and, if he dies pending the action, no further proceedings can be had thereon until a new relator is made a party to the record.[44]

An information and bill cannot be supported unless the relator has some individual interest in the subject matter of the suit,[45] and, if it should afterward appear that he has no interest to be subserved, the bill may be dismissed with costs and the information retained.[46] However, a pleading filed as an information, although having many of the features of a bill, cannot be retained as a bill when dismissed as an information,[47] as the attorney-general cannot, where he fails to make out a case on behalf of the public by his information, bring forward the relator as orator at the hearing.[48]

(c) When Information Will Lie

An information will lie only where a public interest is involved.

An information in equity by the attorney-general or other proper officer can be maintained only where it is brought in the interests of the public,[49] a public grievance must be the basis of the information,[50] and it cannot be brought in the name of the attorney general at the relation of an individual merely for the protection of the latter's private interests.[51] Among other grounds, an information in equity will lie: To assert the government's right to interest in certain property,[52] to establish and enforce the execution of a public trust;[53] or to prevent the misappropriation and misapplication of funds or property raised or held for public use.[54]

(d) Mode of Procedure

aa. In general

bb. With or without relator

aa. In General

An information is commonly brought in the name of the attorney general.

The common form of instituting an information in equity is in the name of the attorney general or other proper law officer on behalf of the government,[55] although it is sometimes brought in the name of the government upon the relation of the attorney-general,[56] or of a private citizen,[57] but in any case the information should show on its face in no uncertain manner that the attorney general is the officer instituting and prosecuting the suit and the sole person responsible for its inception and maintenance.[58]

It has been held that, in the absence of statutory authority to do otherwise, an information by the United States should be filed, not in the name of the attorney-general, but in the name and behalf of the United States.[59]

Leave of court. A statute providing that an attorney general can bring an information on complaint of any private party on leave granted by a circuit judge requires permission of the court only in cases instituted in the circuit court, and has no application to proceedings in the supreme court.[60]

bb. With or without Relator

Where the suit affects sovereign rights, no relator is necessary, but where the action does not affect primarily the public interest it is ordinarily upon relation.

Where the suit immediately concerns the rights of the government alone, the attorney general usually proceeds by way of information without a relator,[61] and, if there is a private relator, it need not appear that he has any special interest in the subject matter or in the relief sought.[62] Where, however, the suit is one that does not immediately concern the rights of the government, it is the more common practice for the attorney general to depend upon the relation of some person whose name is inserted in the information as the relator, in order that there may be someone liable for the costs of the information in case it should turn out that it is improperly filed or improperly conducted,[63] in which case it is called an information ex relatione;[64] but it is not essential even in such cases, that there should be a relator.[65]

Who may be relator. A relator within the rule that the attorney general may insert the name of one in an information as relator, when the suit is one that does not immediately concern the rights of the government, is usually some person interested in the subject matter of the suit and whose private rights may be protected by the decree which is sought mainly on the ground of public injury.[66] It has been held that such a relator may be a private person,[67] the inhabitants of a public corporation,[68] a public board,[69] or the officers of a private institution, such as a church.[70]

Reason stated

"It was the general practice, where suits immediately concerned the right of the crown, for the crown officers to proceed without a relator; yet by reason of a prerogative of the crown not to pay costs to a subject, except in certain cases, sometimes, through the tenderness of the officers towards the defendant, the interposition of a relator was required, against whom the costs were taxed in case it appeared that the suit was improperly instituted or prosecuted. (e) Amendment

An information may be amended as any other pleading.

In a proper case leave may be granted to amend an information so as to make it a technical bill in equity,[71] or to amend a bill by making it either a bill and information or an information.[72]

(f) Conduct and Control of Proceedings

As a general rule the attorney general has exclusive control of information proceedings affecting a public interest, but, where only a private interest is involved, the relator may control the action.

As a general rule the attorney general has entire control of the proceedings, whether the information is filed ex officio or at the instance of a relator; and the suit must be prosecuted by his sanction and be guided and controlled by his judgment.[73] Where the proceeding is by information purely, a relator when joined is not a party in the case except so far as he may be said to be such in the sense that he is directly chargeable with costs,[74] and he cannot be heard by counsel, nor in person,[75] nor can he take any steps in the cause in his own name and independent of the attorney general.[76]

Where the suit does not immediately concern the rights of the government, and is instituted in the name of the state, by the permission of the attorney general upon the relation of the real party in interest, seeking relief, and the state has no direct interest in the event of the suit, the attorney general, as such, has no power to control the conduct of the suit,[77] or to withdraw his consent to the use of the name of the people, to the prejudice of the relator.[78] The suit is then carried on under the direction of the relator and he is considered as answerable to the court and to the parties for the propriety of the suit and the conduct of it; and if the suit appears to have been improperly instituted or improperly conducted he may be held responsible for the costs.[79]

Dismissal. Ordinarily the attorney general may dismiss the proceedings if he thinks proper in the discharge of his official duty,[80] and the relator has no right to move to set aside such dismissal.[81] It has been held, however, that, where the rights of the government are not immediately concerned, and the information is filed with the attorney general's consent on the relation of another, the attorney general cannot dismiss to the prejudice of the relator.[82]

§ 9. —— In Criminal Prosecutions

The attorney general may conduct criminal trials in a proper case where authorized by statute, and has the exclusive right to represent the state on appeal.

Although it is not generally the duty of the attorney general to conduct criminal trials in the court below,[83] he may ordinarily assist the prosecutor whenever he desires to do so, in states where the attorney general exercises common-law powers.[84]

Right to appear before grand jury

(1) Since the statutes expressly authorize attorney general, when in his judgment people's interest requires it, to attend trial and assist in prosecution of crime, defendant cannot object to appearance of attorney general before the grand jury after return of indictment, the word "trial" also including all preliminary and subsequent proceedings in case —People v. Looney, 145 N E 365, 314 Ill 150

(2) While by statute the functions of a prosecuting officer are ordinarily performed by district attorneys, the attorney general is not excluded therefrom where public welfare in his opinion requires his intervention —Commonwealth v. Kozlowsky, 131 N.E 207, 238 Mass 379

(3) A statute providing that the attorney general shall consult with and advise district attorneys and that, if, in his judgment, the public interest so requires, he shall assist them in attending the grand jury, does not impliedly restrict his general authority to intervene whenever

The legislature has the constitutional power to confer upon the attorney general the right in his discretion to supplant states' attorneys or to assist them in the institution and prosecution of criminal cases,[85] and this duty of responding to the call of the governor or legislature is usually regarded as mandatory.[86]

Under statutes requiring the attorney general, when duly requested, to institute or prosecute criminal actions, he is invested with full control over the prosecution, and has all the rights and powers of a prosecuting attorney,[87] although this power in the attorney general is not exclusive of the county attorney where the attorney general is authorized to assist, but not to supplant, the district attorney.[88] The duty imposed by such statute requires no specification by the governor or legislature as to the persons guilty, the witnesses to be called, and the subject matter, but any reasonable request to investigate crime in general, or a certain type of crime in a specified locality is sufficient,[89] and the attorney general may be required to summon and question specified witnesses and to institute criminal proceedings,[90] the attorney general having no discretion as to whether he shall prosecute, or as to whether an examination personally and not before a grand jury shows want of probable cause.[91]

The attorney general cannot suspend the operation of any statute, as by an agreement of immunity to prosecution pending a test of the constitutionality of a statute,[92] but where the attorney general must defend a state official for an act done in the course of his duties, he may direct the solicitor not to bring the action.[93]

Granting immunity to witnesses. Where an attorney general is given general superintendence of prosecutions which he desires to undertake, or which the governor or legislature directs him to undertake, this gives him complete control of the case and all its incidents, so that where the attorney general has promised immunity, or, not having promised it, seeks to grant it, to facilitate investigations, the county attorney cannot prosecute the witness where the attorney general appears and moves to discontinue the action.[94]

Designation of place of confinement. Under statutes authorizing the attorney general of the United States to designate a penitentiary outside the state where a criminal was convicted if the penitentiary in the state of conviction is unsuitable, the attorney general may direct the marshal to remove the prisoner to the designated penitentiary,[95] or he may make a uniform designation for the guidance of the courts in pronouncing sentences in the future.[96]

Appeal. The attorney general may appeal on behalf of the state in cases where an appeal is allowable,[97] but a statute giving the attorney general the right to represent the state on appeal does not prevent the county attorney from taking the appeal.[98]

It is, in the absence of any constitutional or statutory provision to the contrary, the duty of the attorney general to represent the state on criminal appeals,[99] and such cause is under the exclusive control of the attorney general,[1] notwithstanding a stat-

he deems it advisable—Commonwealth v Kozlowsky, supra.

Authority to act on appeal

The attorney general's authority is not terminated by an appeal where he has been directed by the governor to enter a county and try cases in the circuit court of that county or of any county to which the cause should be transferred, and his right to appear in the appellate court is not dependent on the governor's order or request to do so—State v. Fehl, (Or.) 52 P.(2d) 1118.

Liquor law enforcement

Appeal taken by county attorney

The attorney general may proseute making it the duty of a prosecuting attorney to conduct such cause with the advice and assistance of the attorney general.[2]

§ 10. —— In Disbarment Proceedings

In some states the attorney general may institute disbarment proceedings.

In some jurisdictions the attorney general has power to institute disbarment or suspension proceedings.[3]

§ 11. Liabilities

The liability of the attorney general for costs is discussed in § 12, and his liability to civil suit is discussed in § 13.

§ 12. —— Costs and Officer's Fees

An attorney general is not ordinarily liable for costs.

Applying the general rule that a sovereign is not liable for costs, the attorney general, acting in an official capacity as relator for the sovereign, is not liable for costs,[4] and a statute providing that costs will be awarded against the relator in suits instituted in the name of the state does not apply to the attorney general acting ex officio.[5] On the other hand, it has been held, under a similar statute providing that "when the state is plaintiff, the relator only shall be liable," that judgment could be entered against the attorney general, as relator, but that costs so taxed should be paid by the state,[6] and also that the court had a discretion to refuse to render judgment for costs where the suit was against a municipal corporation concerning the distribution of public funds.[7]

§ 13. —— Actions and Proceedings against Attorney General

The attorney general is liable personally in a suit to restrain the enforcement of an unconstitutional statute, but he is not liable for malicious prosecution or abuse of process.

An action to prevent the enforcement of an unconstitutional statute is brought against the attorney general as an individual and not as an officer, on the theory that the act is a personal and not an official act, and that he is personally liable therefor.[8]

Malicious prosecution. The fact that the attorney general or his assistant institutes a criminal proceeding maliciously and without probable cause does not render him personally liable to the person injured, where the act is done in the course of duty;[9] and cute an appeal taken by the county attorney in a criminal proceeding—State v. McDonald, 202 N.W. 211, 48 S.D. 167.

Effect of appointment of special county attorney

Where it is by statute the duty of attorney general to represent state in all actions in criminal court of appeals, an order of district court, directing one appointed temporarily in lieu of regular county attorney to represent state in prosecution of case in such court, is void—Board of Com'rs of Comanche County v. Fain, 166 P. 896, 66 Okl. 13—6 C.J. p. 817 note 32 [a].

2. People v. Bussey, 45 N.W. 594, 80 Mich. 501

Construction of statutes

Although a statute makes it the duty of the prosecuting attorney to appear on appeals in cases he has tried below, this does not affect the exclusive control of the attorney general in view of the fact that the statute giving him control of litigation was not repealed, and in view of other sections requiring notice to the attorney general of application for writ of error, of the issuance of writs of error and certiorari, of the filing of bills of exceptions, and of assignments of errors; but the duties of the parties will be adjusted so that the prosecutor must prepare a brief and argue the case under the direction of the attorney general—People v. Bussey, 45 N.W. 594, 80 Mich. 501

Reasons stated

(1) "If the act which the state attorney general seeks to enforce be a violation of the Federal Constitution, the officer, in proceeding under such enactment, comes into conflict with the superior authority of that Constitution, and he is in that case stripped of his official or representative character and is subjected in his person to the consequences of his individual conduct"—Ex parte Young, (Minn.) 28 S.Ct. 441, 454, 209 U.S. 123, 52 L.Ed. 714, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 932, 14 Ann.Cas. 764

(2) "It would be an injury to complainant to harass it with a multiplicity of suits or litigation generally in an endeavor to enforce penalties under an unconstitutional enactment, and to prevent it ought to be within the jurisdiction of a court of equity"—Ex parte Young, supra.

9. Semmes v. Collins, 82 So. 145, 120 Miss. 265.

Public policy

"In our opinion the law requires us to hold that a special assistant to the Attorney General of the United States, in the performance of the duties imposed upon him by law, is immune from a civil action for malicious prosecution based on an indictment and prosecution, although it results in a verdict of not guilty rendered by a jury. The immunity is absolute, and is grounded on principles of public policy. The public interest requires that persons occupying such important positions and so closely identified with the judicial departments of the government should speak and act freely and fearlessly in the discharge of their important official functions. They should be no more liable to private suits for what they say and do in the discharge of their duties than are the judges and jurors, to say nothing of the witnesses who testify in a case."—Yaselli v. Goff, (C.C.A.N.Y.) 12 F.(2d) 396, 406, 56 A.L.R. 1239, affirming (D.C.) 8 F.(2d) 161, certiorari granted 47 S.Ct. 101, 273 U.S. 677, 71 L.Ed. 835, and affirmed 48 S.Ct. 155, 275 U.S. 503, 72 L.Ed. 395.

this is true even where the attorney maliciously conspired to secure the appointment as prosecutor.[10]

In summary proceedings by intervention of third persons in a criminal action to regain possession of documents retained by the attorney general after their production under a subpœna duces tecum, procedural questions may be disregarded where substantial justice can be done.[11]

§ 14. Privileges and Disabilities

a. Practicing privately
b. Precedence

a. Practicing Privately

In the absence of a statute to the contrary the attorney general may practice law privately.

In the absence of constitutional or statutory inhibition the attorney general may engage in private practice during his term of office;[12] and it has been held that he may appear against the state in cases where it is not his official duty to represent the state.[13]

b. Precedence

The attorney general's cases have no precedence.

It has been held that a cause in which the attorney general is concerned has no preference at the sittings or circuits.[14]

ATTORNEYSHIP. The office of an agent or attorney.[1]

ATTORNMENT. "Attornment," as the word is used in the law of landlord and tenant, will be defined in the title Landlord and Tenant §§ 277–279 [35 C.J. p 1247 note 97–p 1249 note 40]. It has been said that the term is a relic of the old common law, and has been defined as meaning an act of a feudatory, vassal, or tenant, by which he consents, upon the alienation of an estate, to receive a new lord or superior, and transfers to him his homage and service;[2] a turning over or transfer by a lord of the services of his tenant to the grantee of his seigniory.[3]

Phrases "Attornment made . . . in consequence of some judgment at law,"[4] "attornment to . . . a mortgagee,"[5] "attornment . . . to a stranger,"[6] "conveyance under seal with attornment,"[7] and "tenancy arising out of an attornment."[8]

ATTRACTION. Act, property, or power of attracting[9]; also that which attracts or draws; a pleasing or alluring object.[10]

Phrase: "Two attractions each afternoon and evening"[11]

ATTRACTIVE NUISANCE. See Negligence § 29 [45 C.J. p 758 note 12–p 786 note 36].

10. Yaselli v. Goff, supra
Reason stated
"The important fact is that he was appointed to the office, and, having been appointed, the public interests require that he shall be free and fearless to act in the discharge of his official duties. If he cannot be charged with acting willfully and maliciously after he gets appointed to the office, no more can he be charged with having conspired to get into the office in order to act willfully and maliciously after he gets his appointment. The one charge is as much to be feared as the other, and is equally derogatory to his public character and usefulness in the office."—Yaselli v. Goff, (C.C.A.N.Y.) 12 F.(2d) 396, 407, 56 A.L.R. 1239, affirming (D.C.) 8 F.(2d) 161, certiorari granted 47 S.Ct. 101, 273 U.S. 677, 71 L.Ed. 835, and affirmed 48 S.Ct. 155, 275 U.S. 503, 72 L.Ed. 395.

Origin of doctrine, and application in this country
(1) The doctrine of attornment grew out of the peculiar relations existing between the landlord and his tenant under the feudal law, and the reasons for the rule never had any existence in this country, and is inconsistent with our laws, customs and institutions. Beyond its application to estop a tenant from denying the title of his landlord, it can serve but little, if any, useful purpose.—Black L.D., citing Perrin v. Lepper, 34 Mich. 292, 295

(3) "The practice of conducting auctions is of ancient origin. We find that it originated with the Romans in the disposition of military spoils, and the auction was conducted 'under the spear.' On such occasions the spear was stuck in the ground. This practice has passed away as to the spear, but the method of sale by auction continues Later another mode of sale by auction came into practice, called the 'sale by the candle' or 'by the inch of candle' This arose from the use of candles as a means of measuring time. It was declared the goods could be continued to be offered to bidders for so long a time only as would suffice for the burning of one inch of candle When the measure was wasted to that extent, the highest bidder was then declared to be the purchaser."—Korber v. purpose.[2] The main purpose of auction sales is to obtain the best financial returns for the owner of the property sold,[3] and they are based on the purpose and policy of obtaining the worth of property by free and fair competition among the bidders;[4] and hence competition among a number of bidders is a necessary element[5]

Announcement of sale. An announcement that a person will sell his property at public auction to the highest bidder is a mere declaration of intention to hold an auction at which bids will be received[6]

b. Auctioneer

An auctioneer is a person who conducts a public sale of property at auction.

An auctioneer is one who sells goods at public auction for another on commission, or for a recompense;[7] one who conducts a public sale or auction,[8] whether the goods sold are his own or those of another person who employs him.[9]

Other occupations distinguished Auctioneers differ from brokers in that the latter may both buy and sell, whereas auctioneers can only sell[10]

An auctioneer differs from a jobber in that he does not purchase goods at all, but sells the goods of others for a commission, whereas a jobber is a merchant who purchases goods and sells to retailers.[11]

The business of an auctioneer and that of a pawnbroker differ essentially; that of an auctioneer is to sell by public outcry the property of others on an agreement, express or implied that he shall receive compensation for his labor and skill, whereas the business of a pawnbroker consists in the loaning of money on interest[12]

The business of an auctioneer and that of a peddler have been distinguished in that an auctioneer in making a sale at auction acts primarily as the agent of the seller.[13]

c. Bid; Bidder

A bid is an offer to pay a designated price for property at auction; a bidder is one who makes the offer

A bid is an offer by an intending purchaser to pay a designated price for property which is to be sold at auction[14]

Time and conditions of sale
Although an "auction" is defined as a sale by consecutive bidding intended to reach the highest price of the article by exciting competition for it, property may be sold at public auction to the highest bidder and for the "maximum possible amount," although a like public auction under other conditions and at other times might bring many times more, and consequently a much higher "maximum possible amount."—Pike v State Land Comrs, 113 P 447, 19 Idaho 268, Ann Cas 1912B 1344

§ 2. Regulations in General

Conducting auctions is a legitimate business, which cannot be prohibited, but which may be reasonably regulated by state and municipal authority.

Selling goods or any property at public auction has been declared legitimate and a common right,[16] and the business of conducting auctions or acting as an auctioneer has been declared a lawful and legitimate one,[17] not subject to arbitrary interference,[18] and a common right.[19] However, the right to sell goods at public auction is not an absolute one,[20] but is rather a special privilege, which can be withheld unless reasonable regulations are complied with,[21] and the business of an auctioneer is affected with a public interest[22] and subject to legislative restriction[23] and regulation,[24] in order to prevent abuses and frauds;[25] thus, a state legislature may impose such limitations or regulations upon the acts of an auctioneer or the conduct of auction sales as may be reasonable, that is, not wholly arbitrary,[26] reasonable regulations being within the police pow-

Regulation rather than prohibition

Ordinance prohibiting auction sales of linen, laces, etc, except by merchants in business in the city for one year and certain others, was held not prohibitive, but merely regulatory—Saigh v. Common Council of City of Petoskey, 231 N.W. 107, 251 Mich. 77.

Prohibition rather than regulation

Ordinance providing that "the crying of goods, wares or merchandise for sale by auction, or auctioneering, in or on any public place, building or land, the customary or usual passageway into which place, building or land opens or extends immediately into any street or other public way, . . . is hereby declared unlawful and is hereby positively prohibited," was held, if deemed to prohibit the holding of an auction in a private building opening upon a street, an unauthorized prohibition of the business of auctioneers, rather than a regulation thereof, as authorized by statute—Ex parte Manor, 258 S W. 1063, 96 Tex.Cr. 552

'Regulate" not synonymous with "prohibited"

As used in a statute authorizing ordinances to regulate sales at auction, "the word 'regulate,' strictly interpreted, is not synonymous with 'prohibit,' in that it implies the continued existence of the subject-matter to be regulated"—Gordon v City of Indianapolis, 182 N E 124, 125, 204 Ind 79.

Limitation to six days

An ordinance limiting auction sales to six days in the year has been held void as virtually prohibiting such sales.—Miller v. City of Greenville, 132 S E. 591, 134 S C. 314, 46 A L.R 155.

Incidental prohibition

"While the power to 'regulate' does not authorize prohibition in the general sense, a qualified or limited prohibition or restriction is sometimes incidental and indispensible to effective regulation, such, for instance, as to reasonably confine certain classes of business to certain hours of the day, or to certain localities, forbidding it at other hours or in other localities"—Levy v Stone, 121 So. 565, 97 Fla. 458.

Regulation of time of sale. A state statute providing that sales of goods by public auction in a named city shall be made only in the daytime, with stated exceptions, has been held valid and not unconstitutional,[36] likewise, on the ground that it is a proper exercise of the police power,[37] a state statute prohibiting the sale of jewelry and similar goods at auction during specified hours has been held valid and constitutional,[38] and ordinances similarly prohibiting auction sales of jewelry and similar goods during specified hours, generally the hours of darkness, have been so held,[39] as a reasonable and legitimate exercise of the police power,[40] and as not prohibiting sale at auction [41] However, ordinances prohibiting the holding of auction sales during speci-

Reasons for holding

(1) "To say that because the candle and the lamp light have been succeeded by the electric light, deception and fraud cannot be perpetrated, as customers may readily examine all articles by present day artificial light, may not be true to fact With the improvements in science and in manufacture, imitation jewelry and precious stones are much more like the real article than ever before To detect the imitation is now much more difficult. In the examination of jewelry and precious stones, silks, fabrics, and the like, too much artificial light, or the nature of the artificial light, may be as deceiving as the candle or the lamp. The glare may be as obscuring as the darkness. Colors too, as we well known, may take on a different shade altogether, according to the quality or coloring of the light. Manipulations of the lights upon the stage have made it common knowledge that the eye may be readily mistaken as to the actual nature of the thing observed Without any actual intent to defraud, purchasers may be deceived as to the nature and quality of the article they are buying where there is no opportunity to examine it by daylight. The many kinds of light now in use, together with the degree of brilliancy, may make it much easier for a purchaser to be deceived, than by the use of candle or lamp, where the dimness at least was to be anticipated"—Biddles v. Weight of authority

"There is some diversity of opinion amongst the courts upon the validity of a municipal regulation limiting the conduct of auction sales of jewelry and the like to daylight hours. . . . The substantial weight of authority, however, and in our opinion the better reasoning, supports the validity of such a regulation when confined to auction sales of the class of merchandise enumerated in the ordinance under consideration."—Levy v. Stone, 121 So 565, 566, 97 Fla. 458—Matheny v Simmons, 139 So 172, 173, 165 Miss. 429

"It is a matter of common knowledge that in the sale of merchandise of the character affected by this ordinance the public is more readily deceived and becomes an easy prey to fraud, and that auction sales of such merchandise are therefore attended with greater risk to the public. Such sales afford peculiar opportunity to impose upon, defraud, and cheat the public, because the public generally is unskilled in the art of determining the purity, quality, and value of merchandise of this character, to determine which deliberate care and often scientific tests are necessary It is further a matter of common knowledge that fraud and irreparable injury to the public are more likely to occur in auction sales of merchandise of the character here under consideration when the same are conducted after nightfall and by artificial light, and in the excitement of competitive bidding, when little or no opportunity is offered for careful inspection, than in the case of other classes of goods, or in the sale of the character of goods under consideration held during the daytime in the ordinary course of business The rapid sale of such articles at public auction at night, when purchasers must buy at a glance under artificial lights and under the stimulus of competitive bidding, exposes many persons to deception and unscrupulous practices against which this character of regulation might protect them. Similar opportunities for practicing fraud and deception upon the public do not ordinarily attend auction sales of other commodities the quality and value of which are readily ascertainable by the ordinary person The circumstances just stated, and others, furnish practical reasons for the imposition of regulations of this nature upon the sale at auction and at night of jewelry, precious stones, glassware, and the like, which reasons do not exist with respect to auction sales in other lines of business The regulation in question therefore bears a reasonable and practical relation to the object sought to be accomplished by it, namely, the prevention of fraud and deception upon the public"—Levy v. Apart from statute, anyone may act as an auctioneer,[43] and a person who holds himself out to the public as being ready and willing to sell property at auction is a "public auctioneer"[44] Under a valid applicable statute, a town auctioneer has been held a holder of a civil office, and must be a qualified elector for that office.[45]

§ 5. Licenses and Taxes

a. Licenses
b. Taxes

a. Licenses

Statutes requiring auctioneers to procure a prescribed license have been upheld and applied. The proper officer may in his discretion refuse a license. Anyone coming within the ordinary definition of an auctioneer is within a statute requiring a license. Under proper regulations a license may be revoked or forfeited.

Authorities have upheld and applied statutes enacted in many states of the Union, requiring auctioneers to procure a prescribed license,[46] on the payment of a certain fee,[47] and prescribing a penalty for a violation of such provisions[48] A license usually confines the authority of the auctioneer to a particular town or county, or to other particular territory[49]

Power to license or tax generally is discussed in Licenses §§ 4–11 [37 C J p 173 note 73–p 184 note 50]

Right to obtain license. Under the provisions of a municipal charter requiring auctioneers to give a bond and obtain a license, and empowering the mayor, or other officer, to grant such licenses and to revoke them for misconduct of the licensees, it is within the discretion of the mayor, or other officer, to refuse a license, even though a proper bond is tendered,[50] but the discretion must be exercised im-

Reason for holding

"With all the safeguards thrown around the business of sale by auction, the question suggests itself What is the true purpose of the provision of the ordinance forbidding auction sales after sundown? It is not an offense or evil, because it is a legitimate method of doing business It is hard to conceive that the conduct of an auction after sundown would affect the health, morals, safety, or welfare of the community If the ordinance were established for the purpose of stifling competition, then it was not a proper exercise of the delegated police power of the state, granted to the city to license and regulate auctions and auctioneers To justify the state or a municipality the roof to interpose its authority in behalf of the public, it must appear, not only that the interests of the public generally, as distinguished from those of a particular class, require such interference, but also that the means are reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of the purpose and not unduly oppressive upon individuals Lawful occupations cannot be arbitrarily interfered with by unusual and unnecessary restrictions established under the guise of protecting public interests . . . It could be urged as an objection to auction sales after sundown that noises and disturbances might be caused thereby, which would unreasonably interfere with the quietness of the neighborhood The statutes of the state do not lack in any particular proper safeguards for the peace and quiet of the community The provisions of law in relation to disorderly conduct and disorderly assemblies and interference with streets and highways would apply to public auctions in the daytime as well as nighttime, and would apply to all public meetings The law as to nuisances, both public and private, would protect the neighborhood from being unreasonably imposed upon In fact, it is hard to conceive how a public auction, conducted in a reasonable and orderly manner, would cause any more disturbance than any other public meeting or gathering"—Robinson v Wood, 196 N Y S 209, 212, 119 Misc 299

partially and in the public interest.[51]

A corporation may be included within the term "auctioneer" in a statute providing that a city clerk may grant a license to a "person" carrying on the business of auctioneer.[52]

Necessity for license. A provision requiring an auctioneer to procure a license applies usually to anyone who comes within the ordinary definition of "auctioneer,"[53] although he conducts a sale without compensation.[54] There is authority both for[55] and against[56] the proposition that one selling his own goods is within a requirement that auctioneers be licensed.

Under a statute imposing a license charge upon auctioneers doing business in cities and towns, a person selling at public outcry outside of any city or town is not liable.[57]

Validity of sale by an unlicensed auctioneer, see infra § 7 j.

Revocation of license. A municipal corporation vested by its charter with power to regulate and license auctioneers may, by ordinance, empower the mayor, or some other public officer, to revoke a license for cause;[58] and under at least one statute an auctioneer's license may be forfeited in a criminal prosecution, although not in a civil suit, for unfair dealing in his business.[59]

Revocation of license generally is discussed in § 44 of the title Licenses [37 C.J. p 246 note 79–p 249 note 26].

b. Taxes

Statutes provide in some jurisdictions that the auction sales shall be subject to a tax or duty.

Statutes requiring an auctioneer to pay a certain duty or tax on the amount of the sale have been applied in several cases.[60] A statute providing that property sold at public auction shall be subject to an auction duty or tax every time it is struck off imposes the tax only on consummated sales and not on ineffectual efforts to sell.[61]

a. In General

An auctioneer, while primarily the agent of the seller in making the sale, is for some purposes the agent of both parties. His authority may be by implication or ratification, as well as express.

The auctioneer represents a class of agency,[62] and is, for some purposes, and in some respects,[63] the agent of both parties to the sale.[64] An auctioneer, in making a sale, whether of personalty or realty is, by virtue of his employment to make the sale, primarily the agent of the seller,[65] and has been declared to be the agent of the seller alone until the fall of the hammer,[66] he must act in good faith and in the interest of his principal,[67] and the sale must be made in accordance with the latter's instructions.[68] When, however, the property is struck off, the auctioneer is also made the agent of the purchaser, to the extent of binding the parties by his memorandum of sale, by the act of the purchaser in giving him his bid and receiving from him, without objection, the announcement that the property is knocked off to him as purchaser, or by otherwise expressly or impliedly assenting thereto.[69] Authority of an auctioneer to make a memorandum satisfying the statute of frauds is considered in § 171 [27 C.J. p. 265 note 14] and § 211 [27 C.J. p. 293 note 75–p. 294 note 85] of the title Frauds, Statute of.

An auctioneer's authority, when based upon an express contract or instrument, is governed by its terms.[70] Authority may be by implication, as where

Nature of double agency.
While an auctioneer is an agent of both seller and purchaser for signing a contract of sale, it does not follow that his agency for the one is coextensive in its nature and duration with that for the other. His agency for the purchaser is usually conferred when the bid is accepted and begins at the fall of the hammer. Such an authority must be exercised contemporaneously with the sale, but his agency for the seller is generally more extensive, and may cover time both before and after the sale.—White v. Dahlquist Mfg. Co., 60 N.E. 791, 179 Mass. 427.

Representations by the auctioneer as to the title or character of the goods sold bind the principal.—Hoadley v. Vandergrift, 7 Ky. Op. 85.

Clerk.
(1) A clerk at an auction sale is the agent of the owners of the property.—Andrew v. Northwest Davenport Sav. Bank, 253 N.W. 133, 217 Iowa 780.

(2) However, a clerk has been held not to be the vendor's agent for the purpose of receiving notice of rescission from the purchaser.—Pugh v. Dexheimer, 185 N.W. 299, 45 S.D. 55.

Agency coupled with interest.
Where auctioneers by contract assumed full control of the property in advance of sale for the purpose of assortment and preparation, and bound themselves to collect the purchase money, and to pay the same to the use of the owner within ten days, and became guarantors to a creditor of the owner, they were agents of the owner, but their agency was coupled with an interest, and a purchaser at the auction sale had a right to rely upon the auctioneers' personal offer of credit and to make bids accordingly and acquire title, especially where the auctioneers, pursuant to their contract, accounted for the purchases with cash.—McKey v. Erbes, 174 N.W. 372, 187 Iowa 609.

Fraud in obtaining employment.

Tenn.—Green v. Crye, 11 S.W.(2d) 869, 158 Tenn. 109.
6 C.J. p. 825 note 36.

Authority of mere crier.
"When the seller is himself present, directing and controlling the sale, and engages a crier simply to cry the property and knock it off to the best bidder, the seller himself standing by and doing everything else except simply crying the bids, . . . the crier is merely an agent, with no other authority but that of receiving the bids and reporting the result to the seller. He has not the authority of an auctioneer—in the proper sense of the term—as applied to sales by auctions."—Adams v. Scales, 1 Baxt.(Tenn.) 337, 340, 25 Am.R. 772.

70. Writ in succession.
A public auctioneer's authority in goods are sent to an auction room,[71] and a lack of authority may, as in other cases of agency, be supplied by ratification.[72]

An auctioneer is a special agent, and without further authority than that which comes from his position as auctioneer he cannot bind the parties by any contract other than that which is actually made,[73] and a contract which is beyond his authority is not binding on the owner.[74]

Announcement binding seller and buyer. Both seller and buyer are bound by the announcement of the auctioneer as to the identity of the property, the terms, and the conditions of sale.[75]

b. Requirement of Writing

Apart from statute, authority to auction land need not be written.

The authority of an auctioneer to sell land at auction need not be in writing,[76] unless written authority is required by statute.[77]

c. Authority to Warrant

An auctioneer has no authority to warrant except by instruction or by statute.

An auctioneer has no authority to bind the seller by a warranty of the quality or the title of the goods sold, unless specially instructed so to do,[78] or unless authorized by statute;[79] but an auctioneer selling goods "as are" impliedly warrants the existence of the goods in form and substance as advertised.[80]

d. Authority to Receive Payment

The particular conditions of sale may govern the amount, kinds, and time of a payment which an auctioneer has authority to receive on making a sale.

If the conditions of sale merely provide for the deposit to be paid to the auctioneer, it seems that this fact excludes him from receiving the whole price.[81] An auctioneer may receive the deposit or amount to be paid down on a day subsequent to that of the sale.[82] Authorization to sell personal selling by virtue of a writ issued in succession is limited by the terms of the writ—Anderson v. Thomas, 117 So. 573, 166 La. 512

Sale between dates set by contract

An auctioneer may advertise and sell the property at any time between the dates set by the contract between him and the owner, and the owner will be bound to make deeds to the purchasers—Andrews v. Hampton, 94 S.E. 112, 108 S.C. 290.

Owner and adjudicatee are not bound where the auctioneer did not have written authority to sell—Silverstein v. Koppel, 118 So. 224, 166 La. 1075.

An owner is not divested of title by an adjudication following an auction sale of property to satisfy his creditors, where it does not appear that the auctioneer had written authority to offer the property at auction—Harang v. Gheens Realty Co., 98 So. 760, 155 La. 68.

Recitals held insufficient

(1) Mere recital in auctioneer's procès verbal that the sale was by the owner's instructions—Silverstein v. Koppel, 118 So. 224, 166 La. 1075

(2) Where an owner of property agreed to sell it and distribute the proceeds for the benefit of his creditors, and the property was sold at auction, and part of the proceeds distributed, recitals in the notarial act of distribution and in a deed to part of the land that the debtor caused his property to be offered at auction, were insufficient as written evidence of the auctioneer's authority to offer another part, in the absence of a showing that the claimed purchaser had accepted title, he not even being a party to such instruments.—Harang v. Gheens Realty Co., 98 So. 760, 155 La. 68.

Lack of written authority as defense; onus of proof

(1) An owner seeking to enforce adjudications at auction sale has the onus of proving written authority in the hands of the auctioneer at the time of the sale, under penalty of the nullity of the adjudications—Silverstein v. Koppel, 118 So. 224, 166 La. 1075.

(2) An adjudicatee's defense that an auctioneer did not have written authority is peremptory, and may be pleaded in answer or raised under general issue—Silverstein v. Koppel, supra.

Effect of statute of frauds

An auctioneer selling land is not impliedly the agent for the purchaser where the statute of frauds requires the authority of an agent to be in writing in order to bind his principal on a contract for the sale of land—Dunham v. Hartman, 55 S.W. 233, 153 Mo. 625, 77 Am.S.R. 741 property for "cash or good secured bankable notes" gives no authority to accept the owner's outstanding unpaid notes for the purchase price,[83] and, if the terms of an auction sale require a cash payment, the auctioneer has no authority to accept a check drawn on a bank in which the drawer has at the time no funds.[84]

e. Authority to Sell at Private Sale

Private sales by an auctioneer are generally not allowed.

Private sales by an auctioneer are generally not allowed, since the law will not tolerate any fraudulent, unfair, or deceitful conduct in auction sales,[85] although it seems that a private sale may be sustained where all efforts to dispose of the property at public sale have proved abortive.[86]

f. Delegation of Authority

While an auctioneer may delegate ministerial duties and hire necessary assistance, he cannot without special authority delegate his power to sell.

An auctioneer cannot, without special authority, delegate to another his power to sell by auction,[87] since he is selected because of the personal confidence and trust reposed in him.[88] He may, however, delegate ministerial duties, such as using the hammer and making the outcry under his immediate direction and supervision,[89] and may hire such assistance as is reasonably necessary to the performance of his duties.[90]

Delegation of authority by agents generally is considered in §§ 134–137 of the title Agency.

g. Termination of Authority

An auctioneer's agency for the purchaser ends with the sale, while that for the seller may continue thereafter. Unless coupled with an interest, his authority to sell may be revoked by the seller at any time before the sale.

An auctioneer's agency for the purchaser ends with the sale, while his agency for the seller ends with the sale only if he is a mere crier calling for bids, and extends beyond the sale so as to enable him to bind the vendor by a memorandum signed within a reasonable time, if he is given authority to make all the necessary arrangements for carrying the sale into effect.[91] An auctioneer's authority is ordinarily at an end when the sale is completed and the purchase price collected; unless specially authorized, he cannot, after sale, vary the contract of sale or the terms on which title is to be given.[92]

Revocation. An authority given to an auctioneer to sell may be revoked by the vendor at any time before the sale,[93] unless it is coupled with an interest in the subject matter;[94] and a receipt, signed by a representative of the auctioneer and given to the purchaser at a sale made after revocation of the agency, is not binding on the vendor.[95]

95. Jacob v. McDuell, supra.

a. In General

The owner of the property has the right to control the sale until legally made. The particulars and conditions of sale constitute its terms, but an auction sale is not governed by the strict rules applicable to formal contracts

It has been declared that public sales by auction are precisely what the contracts of the parties make them,[96] but the owner of property sold at auction has the right to control the sale until legally made.[97] The particulars or catalogue and the conditions of sale together constitute the terms of the contract of sale;[98] and the making of the contract, or meeting of minds, occurs at the time the goods are knocked down to the purchaser.[99] A sale by auction is not governed by the strict rules applicable to formal contracts made with deliberation after ample opportunity to investigate and inquire.[1] While, in conducting the sale, it is part of the auctioneer's duty to invite and excite the competition of bidding,[2] and to dispose of the property to the highest bidder[3] and for the highest price that he can obtain,[4] and some measure of discretion is vested in him as to the precise methods to be pursued in attaining that object,[5] the sale should be made in accordance with the laws governing public sales.[6]

To complete an auction sale there must be a bidder, the property must be struck off or knocked down, and the person to whom it is struck off must complete his purchase by complying with the terms of the sale,[7] but a sale has been said to be complete when the auctioneer announces its completion by the fall of the hammer or in other customary manner.[8]

Presence of property; inspection. Upon a sale of personal property at public auction, the property must generally be at hand and within the view of those attending,[9] but if it is too bulky to be present in the auction room, and inspection will be of use, the notice of sale must state where the chattel is located, and give opportunity to view it.[10]

Memorandum of sale. It has been said to be a well-settled custom for the auctioneer, when property is knocked off, to make and sign a memorandum of sale.[11]

(1) In General

The owner may prescribe the conditions of sale, but may waive them. In the absence of such prescription, the auctioneer has discretion as to the terms or manner of sale.

The owner of property offered for sale at auction has the right to prescribe the manner, conditions, and terms of sale,[12] although he may waive compliance by the purchaser with the conditions,[13] and the purchaser is entitled to rely on the terms prescribed,[14] and on the announcement made by the auctioneer at the time and place of the sale as to the identity of the property, the terms, and the conditions of sale.[15] In the absence of conditions prescribed by the seller, an auctioneer has much discretion in prescribing such terms of sale as will exclude puffers and fraudulent bidders, and secure the confidence of honest purchasers,[16] and may conduct the sale in such manner as seems to him best calculated to secure the upset price fixed by the seller,[17] and he may postpone the sale.[18]

(2) Printed Conditions

Printed conditions are binding on the parties, and the auctioneer cannot verbally vary, although he may explain, them at the sale.

Printed conditions under which an auction sale proceeds are binding on both buyer[19] and seller,[20] and cannot be varied by verbal statements of the auctioneer made at the time of the sale,[21] although they may be so explained.[22] Thus, an auctioneer may, at the time of the sale, explain the meaning of advertisements published before the sale;[23] but advertisements of the sale have been held no part of the conditions thereof, unless expressly made such.[24]

(3) Knowledge or Notice of Conditions

Conditions of sale announced by the auctioneer are binding on the purchaser whether he knew or understood them or not.

The conditions of a public sale, announced by the auctioneer at the time and place of the sale, are binding on a purchaser, whether or not he knew or heard them,[25] and although he may not have un-

Goods not advertised in catalogue

Bidders on goods put up for sale, which they knew were not advertised in the catalogue, were liable on their bids, although they were not present when the terms on which such goods were to be sold were published, and although such goods were put up for bids immediately after the catalogue

derstood them[26] So, also, where it is the custom to post up the conditions in the auctioneer's room, and the auctioneer announces that the conditions are as usual, a purchaser is bound by the conditions, whether he sees them or not.[27] The auctioneer of goods advertised in a catalogue may change the terms of sale at any time during the progress of the sale, if done publicly and in the hearing of all the bidders present.[28]

(4) Reservation of Right to Resell

Where the auctioneer reserved the right to resell in case of mistake, whether or not a mistake was made must be determined from all the circumstances.

Where an auctioneer announced that he reserved the right to resell any property in case of a mistake, whether or not a mistake was made must be determined on a consideration of all the circumstances[29] Where it was announced at the beginning of an auction that the auctioneer reserved the right to make a resale of any property over which a dispute arose, there is no right to resell property sold as to which no dispute arose, but which the owner desired to be sold differently.[30]

(5) Sale on Approved Security

A condition that a note with approved sureties be given is complied with by tendering a note signed by sureties justly entitled to approval.

A condition in the terms of a sale that a purchaser shall give a note with approved sureties is complied with when he tenders a note duly executed, signed by good and solvent sureties justly entitled to approval, and the seller may not arbitrarily reject such note[31] In case of question as to the character of the note tendered, however, the purchaser is bound to prove either that the seller knew the note to be good or that he had the means of conveniently ascertaining the fact.[32]

c. Catalogue or Particulars of Sale

(1) Warranty
(2) Description of Property

(1) Warranty

In the absence of agreement otherwise, a seller is bound, on entry of an auctioneer's memorandum, by a warranty in a catalogue.

In the absence of agreement or understanding to the contrary, a seller is bound, on the entry of an auctioneer's memorandum of sale, by a warranty contained in a catalogue.[33]

(2) Description of Property

A description of the property should be clear and unambiguous; and a material misdescription, unless cured or corrected, may be ground for avoiding the contract, although slight variations between an estate and a description will not be.

It is usual, in cases where property of considerable value is offered for sale. to reduce a description of it to writing,[34] such description when relating to real estate is called "particulars of sale," the office of which is to describe the subject matter of the contract.[35] The particulars should contain a faithful description of property offered for sale, in language so clear and unambiguous that persons of ordinary understanding will not be deceived as to either its character or identity.[36]

A misdescription, in a material matter, on which the purchaser might reasonably rely and did rely to his damage, is ground for avoidance of the contract,[37] and this is so even though the conditions of sale provide that errors and misdescription shall not avoid the contract.[38]

Slight variations, however, between an estate and a description of it are not grounds for the avoidance of the sale,[39] but, ordinarily, will be cause for goods under different terms, of which the bidders present were informed—Burling v. Brinn, 189 N Y S. 707, 116 Misc 130

Description construed

A statement in an advertisement of a sale by auction of several lots of land, describing the buildings on one as being in good repair, "with running water to house and barns," does not necessarily imply that the source of the supply belonged to the vendor, although the memorandum of sale thereof also included "100 or more rods of lead pipe conveying water to the house."—Wells v. compensation;[40] and where the general description shows an intent to convey an entire property, and its frontage is a few inches longer than as stated in the advertisement, the purchaser has been held entitled to the entire property, and not restricted to the length stated.[41]

Qualifying phrases, such as "more or less," "thereabouts," and "estimated to contain," will cure slight deficiencies and inaccuracies, but they will not protect the vendor against the consequences of intentional misstatements or gross carelessness.[42]

Correction of error. An error in the description of property in an advertisement may be corrected and explained when the property is offered for bids,[43] and where it was made in good faith, and is thus corrected and explained, a purchaser who relied wholly on the printed advertisement and was not present at the opening of the sale is not relieved of his contract by such error.[44]

d. Right to Withdraw Property

Until a bid is accepted, the seller may withdraw his property from sale, and he may withdraw it before any bidding.

Until the hammer falls and a bid is accepted, a locus penitentiæ remains, and the seller may withdraw his property from sale,[45] and he may withdraw it before any bidding,[46] even where the sale is without reserve.[47]

(3) Manner of accepting bid
(4) Right to reject bid
(5) Right to withdraw bid
(6) Dispute as to bid
(7) Chilling the bidding
(8) Puffing or by-bidding

(1) In General

A bid requires acceptance to create an obligation in the bidder or the owner.

A bid at an auction sale is only an offer for the property,[48] requiring acceptance to create an obligation on the part of the bidder[49] or the owner,[50] it is but an offer to purchase, and not the acceptance of an offer.[51]

(2) Manner of Making Bid

A bid may be made in any mode whereby the bidder signifies his willingness to give a particular sum for the property, but secret signs between the bidder and the auctioneer should not be allowed.

A bid may be made in any mode by which the bidder signifies his willingness and intention to give a particular sum or price for the property offered for sale,[52] thus, it may be made orally,[53] as by words uttered aloud in the hearing of the bystanders,[54] or spoken privately to the auctioneer,[55]

or by a wink or a nod,[56] or by writing[57] in words or figures,[58] or by letter.[59]

Secret signs between the bidder and the auctioneer should not be allowed, because all of the bidders would not be on equal terms [60]

(3) Manner of Accepting Bid

A bid is accepted when the auctioneer signifies to the bidder that he is entitled to the property on paying the amount of his bid according to the terms of sale.

A bid is accepted when the auctioneer, by the fall of his hammer or by any other audible or visible means, signifies to the bidder that he is entitled to the property on paying the amount of his bid according to the terms of the sale,[61] thus, acceptance may be in words or by appropriate acts.[62]

(4) Right to Reject Bid

An auctioneer may reject a bid on various grounds, as where it is coupled with terms or conditions other than those of the sale, or is below the minimum announced by the owner.

In the absence of instructions or limitations to the contrary, it seems that the auctioneer, ordinarily, should accept all bids [63] However, he is not bound to accept all bids as a matter of course,[64] thus, he may refuse a bid which will manifestly frustrate the object and purpose of the sale,[65] or acceptance of which would be a virtual sacrifice of the property;[66] and he may refuse to accept bids from minors,[67] from insolvents,[68] from drunkards or other persons irresponsible either financially or mentally,[69] from persons offering their bids in bad faith,[70] or from a person making but a trifling advance in his bid over the bid last announced [71] Where the right is reserved to reject any or all bids, the right must be exercised before the acceptance of any bid [72]

Specific terms; minimum bid. If the terms of sale are specific, the auctioneer need not notice a bid that is coupled with different terms or conditions.[73] Likewise, where the owner of the property to be sold publicly announces that no bid less than a designated amount will be received, the auctioneer may reject a bid that falls below that amount [74]

(5) Right to Withdraw Bid

Until a bid is accepted, the bidder may withdraw it.

Until the hammer falls and a bid is accepted, a locus penitentiæ remains, and the bidder may withdraw his bid,[75] even though the conditions of sale provide that bids shall not be withdrawn.[76] The withdrawal of a bid, in order to be effective, must be open and loud enough to be heard by the auctioneer.[77] In all sales which come within the operation of the statute of frauds, it is probable that a bidder may withdraw his bid before the signing of a sufficient memorandum in writing.[78]

(6) Dispute as to Bid

If a bid is claimed by two or more, the property may be put up again at the price and bid of the competitor whom the auctioneer may declare entitled. A bidder's evidence is competent as to the price bid by the person to whom the property was knocked down.

If a bid is claimed by two or more persons, it is the usual practice to put the property up again at the price and at the bid of such one of the competitors as the auctioneer may declare, in his judgment, entitled to it.[79] On the issue as to the price bid at a sale, evidence of one bidder as to his understanding of the price bid by the person to whom the property was knocked down is competent.[80]

(7) Chilling the Bidding

Any act of auctioneer, seller, or purchaser which diminishes competition and stifles or chills the sale vitiates the sale. An unsuccessful attempt to prevent another from bidding will not invalidate the sale. Combinations of interests or agreements not to bid are voidable or not according to whether or not the parties' object is to chill the sale.

Generally, it may be said that any act of the auctioneer, or of the party selling, or of third parties as purchasers, which prevents a fair, free, and open sale, or which diminishes competition and stifles or chills the sale, is contrary to public policy and vitiates the sale.[81] Thus, a sale will be set aside where a person, desirous of purchasing, prevents others by his improper conduct from bidding against him,[82] but a mere attempt of a purchaser to prevent another person from bidding will not render the sale invalid, if such attempt has not been successful.[83]

Agreements not to bid. It has been broadly held that prospective bidders at a public sale cannot fraudulently agree to refrain from bidding one against the other,[84] and that to do so renders the sale to any one of the confederates void.[85] More particularly, sales which are affected by combinations of interests or agreements not to bid are voidable by the seller, if the purpose thereof is to chill the sale and purchase property for less than its market value,[86] although the fact that a combination has been formed to prevent a sale to others will not affect a purchase by one not a party to the combination.[87] If, on the other hand, the agreement is made without any design to commit a fraud, but to enable the parties to the agreement to purchase conveniently, or if the agreement is for any honest purpose, the sale will be valid,[88] as

Allegations of stifling competition held sufficient

(1) A complaint, alleging that defendant purchased property at an auction sale at less than its value by secretly instructing one who had been bidding for an organization to procure the property for a charitable hospital to continue bidding for defendant as an individual after the charitable organization's limit was reached, whereby competition was stifled by the unwillingness of other bidders to hinder the charitable project, states a cause of action, entitling plaintiffs to have the deed given as a result of the sale set aside.—Nash v. Elizabeth City Hospital Co., 104 S.E. 33, 180 N.C. 59.

(2) In such a complaint, a general allegation that defendant had unlawfully and inequitably procured a deed for the property purchased, and induced the inclusion therein of property not offered at the sale, is only an addendum to the principal cause of action, and is sufficient by way of forestalling a possible defense of ratification.—Nash v. Elizabeth City Hospital Co., supra.

Evidence was held to sustain a finding that the auctioneer did not fraudulently stifle the bidding.—Carr v. Melone, 13 S.W.(2d) 1031, 227 Ky. 719.

That winning bid was only twenty-five cents higher than the preceding bid of ten thousand one hundred twelve dollars is not of itself sufficient to impute fraud on the part of the auctioneer in stifling bidding, or to raise a suspicion of sharp practice.—Carr v. Melone, 13 S.W.(2d) 1031, 227 Ky. 719.

Secret arrangement giving a bidder a lot for less than his bid could not affect bidders on lots subsequently sold, where there was a good-faith bid by another bidder for a trifle less than his bid.—Osborn v. Agreement not carried into effect

Where the members of a corporation selling its land at public auction entered into an agreement by which any of them might bid for land and take it or not, as they chose, but the agreement was not carried into effect, it was held that the sale was not invalid.—Buckley v. Briggs, 30 Mo. 452.

Question for jury

Whether an agreement or combination existed which tended to stifle competition is a question of fact for the jury.—Hunt v. Elliott, 80 Ind. 245, 41 Am.R. 794—Pike v. Balch, 38 Me. 302, 61 Am.D. 248—Hopkins v. Ensign, 25 N.E. 306, 122 N.Y. 144, 9 L.R.A. 781—6 C.J. p. 831 note 10 [d].

88. Kearney v. Taylor, 15 How.(U.S.) 494, 520, 14 L.Ed. 787—6 C.J. p. 831 note 11.

"It is true that in every association formed to bid at the sale, and who appoint one of their number to bid in behalf of the company, there is an agreement, express or implied, that no other member will participate in the bidding; and hence, in one sense, it may be said to have the effect to prevent competition. But it by no means necessarily follows that where persons, neither of whom is able to purchase, or desires to own, the whole property, unite for the purpose of making a bid among themselves.[89]

(8) Puffing or By-Bidding

A puffer cannot recover compensation; and the courts will not give relief to any party to a fake sale on a sham bid By the weight of authority, sales induced by actual puffing or by bidding are void or, at the purchaser's option, voidable, whether the purchaser must show resulting prejudice is in dispute However, the seller may reserve the right to bid or to employ another to bid for him, if he gives fair notice.

A puffer, in the strictest meaning of the word, is a person who, without having any intention to purchase, is employed by the seller at an auction to raise the price by fictitious bids, thereby increasing competition among the bidders, while he himself is secured from risk by a secret understanding with the seller that he shall not be bound by his bids,[90] and "by-bidder" has been defined in practically the same terms.[91] One who bids at a public sale not because of any desire to purchase, but merely for the purpose, either in his own interest or that of another, of running up the price, is not a puffer if, in case his bid is the last and highest, he can be compelled to take and pay for the property.[92]

Rights and liabilities of puffer. A puffer cannot recover compensation for his services.[93] The courts will refuse to give relief to any party to a fake sale made on a sham bid,[94] and will not hold the bidder to the pretended sale on the suit of the owner,[95] nor allow the seller to avoid the sale by alleging the fraudulent agreement for running up the price.[96]

Effect on the sale in general. While it has been said that there is some conflict in the cases as to the effect of by-bidding or puffing at auction sales,[97] and that on authority the question is not entirely free from doubt,[98] and there are some cases not in harmony with the more generally accepted rule,[99] it has been broadly declared that puffing[1] or by-bidding[2] is forbidden by law, and that contracts induced by puffing or by-bidding are void or voidable,[3] as against public policy,[4] and it is clear, if the association had not been formed, and each member left to bid on his own account, that the competition at the sale would be as strong and efficient as it would by reason of the joint bid for the benefit and upon the responsibility of all."—Kearney v. Taylor, supra.

Historical

"The law courts of England in an early day held that, no matter what the purpose was in employing by-bidders, the purchaser could reject the sale and refuse to comply with it. The English chancery courts adopted a different rule and held that if the employment of by-bidders was only to prevent a sacrifice of the property, and that the vendor acted in good faith and the purchaser was not required to pay more than the reasonable value of the property, he could not repudiate his contract, but would be required to perform Later an act of Parliament repealed the rule promulgated by the chancery courts. Some American opinions have followed the rule announced by the chancery courts of England, but the great majority of American jurisdictions adopt the rule announced by the English common-law courts, and hold that the purchaser at an auction sale purporting to be without reserve may repudiate the contract and decline to perform it if the vendor of the property or his agent for whose acts he was responsible employed by-bidders or puffers, who actually bid upon the property with the understanding that they were not to take it if it should be knocked off to them"—Burdon v. By-bidding as not puffing or fraud

The mere bidding on property sold at public auction by by-bidders who are agents of the owner is not sufficient, when alleged in a pleading, to show that the owner was undertaking to "puff" the property, and thereby commit fraud upon the purchaser —Beasley v Burton, 124 S E 368, 32 Ga App 727

both on principle and the weight of the authorities, that, where a sale is advertised or stated to be without reserve, there is an implied guaranty that the property is to be sold to the highest bidder, and each bidder has the right to assume that all previous bids are genuine, and the seller in substance so assures him; and hence, the secret employment, by the seller, of a puffer or by-bidder is equivalent to a false representation, and renders the sale voidable at the option of the purchaser,[5] at least if there is an actual bid by the puffer or by-bidder.[6] In order to avoid the sale on this ground, the purchaser has been required to show that he was prejudiced by the puffing,[7] but other opinion is to the contrary;[8] thus, the fact that no

5. Burdon v. Seitz, 267 S.W. 219, 206 Ky. 336—6 C.J. p. 833 note 19.

Reasons for rule

(1) "The reason given for the majority rule is that the employment of by-bidders is not only against the soundest principles of public policy, but is a fraud upon the purchaser, and that such secret arrangements are offensive to fair dealing, which it is the purpose and intent of the law to administer between litigants" —Burdon v. Seitz, 267 S.W. 219, 220, 206 Ky. 336.

(2) "It is well known that bidders at auction sales are influenced to a considerable extent by the number of other bidders, the amounts offered by them and the apparent anxiety they show to become the owners of the property, and if these conditions are affected by a private arrangement between the auctioneer and the owner, as the result of which persons who were not in reality intending to buy are allowed to appear as genuine competitors, it holds out to those who are real bidders false inducements, and makes false representations to them as to the desirability of the property and the demand for it, which in fact operate as a fraud upon them. For this reason it would seem, upon principle, that the private employment of a puffer by an owner at an auction sale rendered the sale void, and relieved the person to whom the property was struck off from the necessity of performing his contract"—Bowman v. McClenahan, 46 N.Y.S. 945, 946, 20 App.Div. 346.

(1) Evidence is held sufficient to show that there was a by-bidder at a sale—Burdon v. Seitz, 267 S.W. 219, 206 Ky. 336.

(2) Evidence held sufficient to show that a sale was tainted by puffing or by-bidding—Edmunds v. Gwynn, 161 S.E. 892, 157 Va. 528, reversing 159 S.E. 205, 157 Va. 528.

By-bidding held not shown

(1) Evidence is held to sustain a finding that a person bidding against plaintiff at a sale was not a by-bidder—Newman v. Woolley, 255 S.W. 1050, 201 Ky. 139.

(2) A purchaser of a lot having a secret arrangement for a price below the amount of his bid is held not a by-bidder, so as to relieve the bidder on another lot—Osborn v. Apperson Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, No. 195, of Louisa, Ky., 281 S.W. 500, 213 Ky. 533, 46 A.L.R. 117.

(3) Where one of three joint owners of land sold at public auction entered into an agreement with a bidder, to which the other joint owners did not consent, to purchase land jointly with the bidder for a price not in excess of a certain amount, the bidding by such bidder was not such by-bidding as to invalidate a sale to another bidder—Manuel v. Haselden, 268 S.W. 554, 206 Ky. 796.

Effect of subsequent arrangement

A purchaser of a lot at auction cannot be said to have been influenced in bidding by a subsequent private arrangement with the purchaser of another lot by which the latter procured a lot for a sum less than his bid—Osborn v. Apperson Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, No. 195, of Louisa, Ky., 281 S.W. 500, 213 Ky. 533, 46 A.L.R. 117.

Puffer employed by person interested in proceeds of sale

The rule that the employment of puffers by the owner of the property sold vitiates the sale does not apply where the person interested in the proceeds of the sale employs a third person to bid for the purpose of enhancing the price—McMillan v. Harris, 35 S.E. 334, 110 Ga. 72, 78 Am.S.R. 93, 48 L.R.A. 345.

Bid by or for lodge member

(1) A member of a lodge is not precluded from bidding at an auction sale of land owned by the lodge—Osborn v. Apperson Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, No. 195, of Louisa, Ky., 281 S.W. 500, 213 Ky. 533, 46 A.L.R. 117.

(2) A purchaser at an auction sale by a lodge cannot complain that the property was run up by a person bidding in good faith for a member of the lodge—Osborn v. Apperson Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, No. 195, of Louisa, Ky., supra.

6. Burdon v. Seitz, 267 S.W. 219, 206 Ky. 336—Newman v. Woolley, 255 S.W. 1050, 1052, 201 Ky. 139.

"The very basis of the right of a purchaser at such a sale to refuse to comply with his bid because of a by-bid or puffer's bid is that such a bid was made whereby he, in the excitement, was induced to bid still more; but it is difficult to understand how he could have been so induced when there was no bid by such by-bidder or puffer. The very language in which the text-writers state the proposition shows clearly there must be an actual bid by the by-bidder before the purchaser may take advantage of it"—Newman v. Woolley, supra.

7. Curtis v. Aspinwall, 114 Mass. 187, 19 Am.R. 332—6 C.J. p. 833 note 20.

Cases criticized

"The cases . . . in support of . . . [the text holding] are the few ones that follow the ancient English chancery rule upon the subject" —Burdon v. Seitz, 267 S.W. 219, 220, 206 Ky. 336.

Presumption as to effect of by-bidding

(1) "Where there is only a single parcel offered at a sale held without reserve, if there is secret by-bidding the purchaser has the absolute right to repudiate the contract, and the presumption that he has been imposed upon is absolute . . . But in a sale of lots in a subdivision, where the by-bidding is upon lots sold before the one knocked off to the complainant, it is only a prima facie presumption which may be rebutted"—Osborn v. Apperson Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, No. 195, of Louisa, Ky., 281 S.W. 500, 502, 213 Ky. 533, 46 A.L.R. 117.

(2) Evidence is held to rebut the presumption that the buyer of a lot at auction was influenced by fictitious bids on other lots—Osborn v. Apperson Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, No. 195, of Louisa, Ky., supra.

Burden of proof on seller; presumption

(1) "If the fact that no harm resulted is material at all . . . the burden of proving it should be upon the person who has employed the puffers to bid up the price of his harm resulted has been held immaterial,[9] and the general rule has been held to apply, even though the price was not increased by the puffing,[10] or though the purchaser did not bid more than the property was worth,[11] and the question whether or not the price paid was fair has been held immaterial.[12] The buyer, in order to avoid a sale, is required to return, or offer to return, the property purchased,[13] and he must not be guilty of laches in exercising his option.[14] It is competent, however, for a seller to fix a minimum price, or to reserve to himself the right to bid, or to employ another to bid for him, if he gives fair notice of such fact;[15] and the owner of property may bid on it and thus prevent a sale for less than its value without thereby becoming a puffer and fraudulently inducing the purchaser at the sale to pay more than the property is worth.[16]

Employment of puffer without owner's knowledge. The fact that a puffer is employed by the auctioneer without the knowledge of the owner of the property does not alter the application of the rule that puffing avoids the sale.[17] The fact that one mistakenly acts as a puffer at a sale does not render the sale void as to the purchaser of the property, if the auctioneer and the owner of the property had no knowledge of such person's conduct.[18]

f. Deposit

A deposit is not a mere pledge, but a part payment of the purchase price. Absent facts showing that he is only the seller's agent, the auctioneer holds the money as a stakeholder, with the duty to retain it until the party to whom it is due is ascertained.

A deposit required from a bidder is not a mere pledge, but a part payment of the purchase price,[19] and, on the vendor's passing good title, it becomes his property, less the auctioneer's charges and commissions.[20] The deposit is usually made payable to the auctioneer,[21] who, in the absence of facts which indicate that he acts as the agent of the vendor alone,[22] is a stakeholder,[23] with the property."—Bowman v. McClenahan, 46 N.Y.S. 945, 949, 20 App.Div. 346.

(2) "He who seeks to uphold a contract . . . tainted [by the employment of puffers or by-bidders] has upon him the burden of showing that by-bidding did not actually affect the sale"—Edmunds v. Gwynn, 161 S.E. 892, 894, 157 Va. 528, reversing 159 S.E. 205, 157 Va. 528.

(3) In cases where puffing is practiced, the presumption that real bidders on the same property are influenced and misled by it is very strong, if not conclusive. The buyer, therefore, may avoid the sale, without further proof that he has been influenced and injured, if there is no evidence tending to control or rebut such presumption.—Curtis v. Aspinwall, 114 Mass. 187, 19 Am.R. 333.

duty, as such, to retain this money until, by the completion or rescission of the contract of sale, the party to whom it is due is ascertained,[24] or good title is found to have passed,[25] and neither party can, without the consent of the other, revoke his authority[26]

g. Disturbance of Sale

An action lies against a bidder at a sale for a disturbance of the sale[27]

h. Inclusion of Property of Third Person

Property of one person should not be sold along with that of another without notice.

Where property has been advertised as belonging to a certain person, and the property of another is sold along with it, this fact should be announced, as it may amount to a fraud to sell property as belonging to one person when it really belongs to another.[28] Where another's property is included with the knowledge and consent of all concerned, and a note and mortgage for the price are executed by the purchaser and accepted by the original seller, title and right of possession pass to the purchaser.[29]

i. Purchase by Auctioneer

An auctioneer cannot bid on, or purchase, or be interested in the purchase of, the property he is selling, although an agency to bid a particular sum for a purchaser is not necessarily inconsistent with his duty.

Since, as appears in § 6 a, an auctioneer is primarily the agent of the seller until the property is struck off, and, as such, cannot act inconsistently with the interest of his principal, an auctioneer cannot bid on, or be the purchaser of, or be interested in the purchase of, the property which he is selling, either for himself,[30] or for another.[31] It has been held, however, that an agency simply to bid a particular sum for a purchaser is not necessarily inconsistent with any duty of the auctioneer, and does not enable any one to avoid the sale.[32]

j. Sale by Unlicensed Auctioneer

An auction sale is not invalid because conducted by one not licensed as an auctioneer.

A sale at auction is not invalid because it was conducted by a person not licensed as an auctioneer, even though the act of selling subjects such person to a penalty.[33]

k. Sale of Several Lots

The purchase of several lots by one purchaser constitutes one entire contract, but, where several lots are put up separately and are separately struck off to the same purchaser, there is an independent contract as to each.

It has been held that the purchase of several lots of property by the same purchaser constitutes but one entire contract,[34] and that it will make no difference if the sale continues several days, and the bids are made on different days[35] On the other hand, it has been held that, if several lots are put up separately, and are separately struck off to the same purchaser, and on each occasion the auctioneer writes down the name of the purchaser, there is in point of law a distinct and independent contract as to each lot, although the purchaser afterward signs one memorandum that he has bought the several lots.[36]

§ 8. Rights and Liabilities of Buyer and Seller

a. When title and possession pass
b. Purchase by agent for undisclosed principal
c. Remedies of buyer
d. Lien and remedies of seller
e. Rights as to deposit or partial payment

a. When Title and Possession Pass

Under a sale without conditions, title passes to the bidder when the property is knocked down, but, where terms or conditions are imposed, title passes when there has been a compliance therewith or waiver thereof. Unless other terms are announced, the bidder is entitled to possession when he pays or tenders the amount bid, or delivers or tenders the note or obligation required.

Under a sale without conditions, the rule is that the title passes to the bidder when the property is knocked down to him[38] The failure to furnish pedigrees of animals sold does not defeat the passing of title or render the sale without consideration;[39] so the fact that there was an outstanding mortgage on the property, which may have constituted a breach of an implied warranty, would not of itself defeat the passing of title to the purchaser,[40] nor does the fact that the purchaser failed to furnish the price on the day at which he stated he would prevent the passing of title[41] A successful bidder's ownership is not affected by the seller's claim that the auctioneer retained a larger commission than was due him, where the bidder is not chargeable with notice of breach of contract or excess of authority on the auctioneer's part.[42]

Where terms or conditions are imposed on the sale, the title does not pass until there has been a compliance with the terms or conditions,[43] or until they have been waived;[44] and it is held that if there has been no actual delivery, the title will not pass to the purchaser until the amount of his bid is paid or tendered,[45] or, if the sale is on credit, until he delivers or tenders such a note or obligation as the terms of the sale require.[46]

Time for completing purchase. It is usual to provide in the conditions of sale a time for the completion of the purchase, in which case time will be of the essence of the contract where the parties intended it to be so.[47]

When possession passes. Unless other terms have been announced,[48] the successful bidder receives, or is entitled to, possession when he pays or tenders the amount of his bid,[49] or, if the sale is on credit, when he delivers or tenders such a note or obligation as the terms of the sale require.[50]

b. Purchase by Agent for Undisclosed Principal

One bidding for another is personally liable as purchaser if he does not disclose his principal's name, but not if he does.

A person bidding at an auction as the agent of another need not disclose to other bidders the name of the person for whom he is bidding, unless the person for whom he acts is the vendor.[51] Where one bids for another, but does not disclose the

c. Remedies of Buyer

(1) Rescission of contract
(2) Other remedies

(1) Rescission of Contract

A buyer may have the sale set aside for fraud, or for false or mistaken representation, as to a material matter, by which he was misled and on which he relied to his damage, or for the seller's failure to give good title, or for total failure of consideration.

A contract of sale entered into at an auction may be rescinded by the buyer where the proper grounds exist.[54] Thus, as a general rule, where there has been fraud on the part of the auctioneer,[55] or false or mistaken representation by the seller or the auctioneer as to a material matter,[56] such as the identity[57] or quality[58] of the property sold, or a failure of the seller to give good title,[59] or a total failure of consideration,[60] as where the property sold was of no value,[61] the buyer may be relieved of his purchase and is entitled to have the contract of sale set aside, but he is not so entitled if he was not misled by the misrepresentation,[62] as where he had knowledge of the true state of facts,[63] or if he did not rely on it in making his purchase,[64] as where he was ignorant of it,[65] or if he was not damaged,[66] or if a mistake was due to his own inexcusable neglect.[67]

Bradley, 115 So. 403, 165 La. 106.

A purchaser cannot claim title where he himself has rescinded the settlement on which his claim rests.[68]

Rescission of the contract of sale because of the employment of puffers or by-bidders is considered supra § 7 e (8), and because of misdescription of the property supra § 7 c (2).

Statements of opinion or in praise of property offered for sale are not causes for avoiding a sale unless they amount to misrepresentation or suppression of a material fact.[69]

Loose and indefinite expressions which should put a buyer on his guard are not grounds for having a sale set aside.[70]

Sale by interested auctioneer. The fact that an auctioneer, unknown to the bidders, is interested in the property sold renders the sale voidable at the option of the purchaser, although no actual fraud or bad faith is shown.[71]

(2) Other Remedies

The rule of caveat emptor has been applied to auction sale of personalty, but not of realty. In proper circumstances, a purchaser may recover for the seller's failure to comply with the terms of sale, for a partial failure of goods to meet the contract of sale, or for the auctioneer's misrepresentation; or he may bring replevin or compel a conveyance.

The rule of caveat emptor has been held to apply in the sale of personal property at public auction,[72] and it has likewise been broadly said to be the rule at a public sale,[73] but the rule has been held inapplicable, in particular circumstances, to an auction sale of realty.[74]

Where the purchaser has complied with the terms of the sale, but the seller fails to comply on his part, as by failing to deliver the property, the purchaser is entitled to recover whatever damages he may have sustained thereby,[75] and, on duly tendering the purchase price of goods not in his possession, but of which he is the owner, may bring replevin therefor against the seller.[76] The purchaser may recover for a partial failure of the goods to meet the contract of sale,[77] and a misrepresentation by the auctioneer may give the purchaser a good cause of action against the vendor.[78] A successful bidder may compel a conveyance of realty provided the memorandum is sufficient under the statute of frauds.[79]

the other was bidding, the purchaser cannot be relieved from the contract on that ground, if the error was brought about solely by his own carelessness, particularly if the price was not, as he claimed it was, thereby enhanced beyond the real value of the property—Spellman v Bradley, 115 So 403, 165 La 106.

d. Lien and Remedies of Seller

(1) Lien of seller
(2) Rescission of contract
(3) Action for damages or price
(4) Resale

(1) Lien of Seller

The seller has a lien on the property until the price is paid or tendered.

Until the purchase price is paid, or a tender thereof made, the seller has a lien on the property sold.[80]

(2) Rescission of Contract

On proper grounds, a seller may rescind a contract of sale; and, on the purchaser's failure to comply with the conditions of a sale, he may treat the contract as abandoned.

A contract of sale entered into at an auction may be rescinded by the seller where the proper grounds exist.[81] On the failure of a purchaser to comply with the conditions of a sale, the seller may treat the contract as abandoned.[82] The taking of bids from "the air" by the auctioneer cannot furnish the seller a basis for repudiating a sale, where the buyers seek to have it completed.[83]

Agreements not to bid as avoiding the sale are considered in § 7 e (7) (b).

(3) Action for Damages or Price

A seller may sue, for damages or for the purchase price, a purchaser who refuses to comply with his bid or the terms of sale.

Where personal or real property is sold at public auction and the purchaser refuses to comply with his bid or with the terms of sale, the vendor may maintain an action against him for damages[84] or for the purchase price.[85]

(4) Resale

On a buyer's noncompliance with the terms of sale, the seller may resell the property, the buyer being liable, under some authorities, for the difference between the original purchase price and the sum received at the resale, and, under others, for the difference between the bid at the first sale and the value at the time of the second. The resale must be fair and after reasonable notice, and on terms not more onerous than those of the first sale, and should ordinarily be by auction.

If a buyer does not comply with the terms of sale, the seller may, after giving him reasonable notice, resell the property at auction at the risk of the buyer.[86] In such a case, a buyer who, without

Notice of the time and place of the resale need not be given—Green v Ansley, 19 S E. 53, 92 Ga. 647, 44 Am.S R. 110.

Time of resale

Upon refusal of purchaser at an auction sale to comply with his bid, the property may be resold before the bidders disperse without a new legal justification, has failed to take property sold to him is not liable to the seller for the full purchase price,[87] but is liable for the difference between the original purchase price and the sum received at the resale,[88] together with the reasonable expenses of the sale,[89] but other authority holds that such difference, while it affords a good criterion as to the damages sustained by the vendor, is not binding on the jury,[90] and that the true measure of damages is the difference between the price bid at the first sale and the value,[91] more particularly the market value, not the actual cash value,[92] at the time of the second sale. The seller may deduct the loss from any deposit which he may have in his hands arising from the first sale.[93]

Conduct of resale. In order to hold the first buyer liable for a deficiency in price caused by the second sale, the conditions of the resale must be the same or not more onerous than those of the first sale.[94] The resale must be conducted fairly and after reasonable notice,[95] and ordinarily should be by auction,[96] although it has been said that it is not absolutely necessary that the property should be resold at auction or that the first buyer should be notified thereof,[97] since all that he is entitled to is that the second sale shall be fair and honest in every way and that the seller shall take all reasonable means to get the most he can for the property.[98]

e. Rights as to Deposit or Partial Payment

A buyer causing the sale to fail through, or, at least where it is so stipulated, failing to comply with his contract, cannot recover his deposit or partial payment, but, where the sale fails through without his fault, he may recover the deposit or payment from the seller.

Where it is stipulated that the deposit shall be forfeited if the purchaser does not comply with his contract, the deposit, in such an event, may not be recovered back either at law or in equity,[99] likewise, a partial payment cannot be recovered where the sale falls through on account of the purchaser's fault,[1] although it has been held that there will be no forfeiture of the deposit in the absence of express stipulation.[2]

However, if the contract of sale falls through without fault on the part of the purchaser,[3] as because of the failure of the vendor to convey a good title as agreed,[4] or because of some fraud or advertisement, or it may thereafter be resold if it is newly advertised —Love v. Harris, 72 S E 150, 156 N C 88, 36 L R A.(N S.) 927, Ann Cas 1912D 1065.

Evidence as to original sale inadmissible

Where, in an action for failure to pay for purchases at an auction sale, defendant's attorney claims only that the resale by plaintiff was not in good faith, and expressly states that he does not claim the original sale was fraudulent, testimony as to irregularities and dishonest acts by plaintiff in connection with the original sale is improperly admitted—Shongut v. Meyers, 168 N Y S 2.

Advice of counsel as to title

A purchaser of land is not justified in demanding back a deposit paid by him on account of the purchase money merely because of the opinion of counsel, given in good misrepresentation on the part of the vendor or the auctioneer,[5] the deposit may be recovered from the vendor; and a partial payment of the purchase price may be recovered where the sale falls through because of some failure or fault of the vendor or the auctioneer.[6]

If a sale is abandoned by mutual consent, and the purchaser forbids the auctioneer to pay over the deposit money to the vendor, and thus prevents him from doing so, the vendor is not responsible for its return, the remedy of the purchaser in such case being against the auctioneer.[7]

Deposit generally is considered in § 7 f supra, and the auctioneer's liability to the purchaser for the deposit, in § 13 b (2) infra.

Interest on deposit. On the failure of a vendor to convey a perfect title as agreed, a purchaser is entitled to interest on the deposit from the time of the demand for the deposit and the refusal to pay.[8]

§ 9. Rights of Auctioneer in General

See infra this title §§ 10–12. Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 10. Indemnity for Expenses

Subject to specific terms of contract, an auctioneer may recover from his principal moneys properly expended or advanced.

An auctioneer may recover from his principal all moneys that he may have expended or advanced in the proper discharge of his duties,[9] provided the seller is given the benefit of any discount or rebate received by the auctioneer;[10] but if, by the terms of the contract, a specified sum is due for expenses only in the event that the property is sold, the auctioneer is not entitled to such sum if there is no sale.[11] An auctioneer whose authority is revoked before sale may recover what he has properly expended.[12]

§ 11. Compensation

a. In general
b. Compensation from seller
c. Compensation from buyer
d. Amount of compensation

a. In General

An auctioneer's commissions are payable by the party employing him.

An auctioneer's commissions are to be paid by the party who employed him and agreed to pay him[13]

b. Compensation from Seller

An auctioneer is entitled to commissions if he is the procuring cause of a sale, even if, without his fault, it is not carried out; but he is not so entitled where no sale is made because of his improper conduct of the auction, or where he is guilty of fraud or bad faith toward the seller, or fails to make sufficient memoranda, or where another makes the sale.

Tender of balance not required

If the parties to a sale of land by auction meet on the day fixed for the performance of the contract, and the seller, without waiting for a formal request by the buyer, tenders a deed of the land which is insufficient to convey a good title, and the buyer refuses to accept it upon that ground, no formal tender by the buyer of the balance of the purchase money, or offer to perform on his part, or request to the seller for performance, is necessary, if the buyer is ready to perform, in order to entitle him to maintain an action against the seller for the portion of the purchase money paid at the sale—Gormley v. Kyle, 137 Mass 189

Contract provision not affecting owner's liability

Where the owner of land and the auction company employed a clerk of sale, and the auction company signed a contract providing for the refunding of the earnest money if title was not good or could not be made good in the owner, and the owner and purchaser accepted its terms in writing, the money paid by the purchaser to the clerk was in effect payment to the owner, and on failure of title, a provision in the contract relieving the auction company of all liabilities except for the return of the purchase money did not affect the owner's liability—Bondhus v Swenson, 204 N.W. 26, 163 Minn. 362

13. Holtsinger v Beverly, 186 S E 776, 53 Ga App 614.

An auctioneer intrusted with the sale of property is entitled to his commissions if he is the procuring cause of a sale,[14] even though, through the act or default of the seller, without any fault on the auctioneer's part, the contract of sale is rescinded[15] or abandoned,[16] or though, through no fault of the auctioneer, the seller cannot perform.[17] Likewise, where an owner contracts with an auctioneer for his services, the owner cannot escape liability by putting the sale off, with the intent of preventing it, until the stipulated time limit has expired,[18] and if the sale is begun and not completed, without fault on the part of the auctioneer, because the owner refused to allow it to proceed, the auctioneer may recover as for a completed sale, according to the terms of his contract.[19]

On the other hand, an auctioneer is not entitled to commission where, because of his negligent and improper conduct of the auction, no sale is made,[20] or where the contract makes commissions payable only for full and final performance, and no sale is made,[21] nor is he entitled to compensation on sales made by another without any assistance from him,[22] or where he is guilty of fraud or bad faith toward the seller,[23] as where he modifies the terms of sale without the seller's consent[24] or without informing him of the modification,[25] unless the fraud is waived,[26] or where the memoranda which he makes are insufficient under the statute of frauds to show a binding contract between the owner and the bidder.[27]

After an owner has confirmed a sale, he cannot defeat the right to commissions by subsequently promising to pay them on a condition not provided for in the contract.[28]

A contract, drawn by an auctioneer, and requiring the owner to accept the highest price obtainable, will not be construed in such a way as to give the auctioneer an unfair and unreasonable advantage in claiming compensation.[29]

c. Compensation from Buyer

An auctioneer cannot recover damages to the extent of his commission from a purchaser who rejects the deed; nor is a bidder who induces him to depart from the terms of sale, so that the seller calls it off, liable for his fee.

Auctioneers employed to sell land by the owner thereof cannot recover damages to the extent of their commission from one who purchased the land at the auction, but who subsequently refused to accept the deeds, there being no privity of contract between the auctioneers and such purchaser,[30] particularly where the owner voluntarily released such purchaser from the contract of purchase, so that whatever obligations were incurred by the latter's bid were at an end.[31] A successful bidder does not become liable for the auctioneer's fee by reason of inducing him to depart from the terms of sale, with the result that the sale is called off by the seller.[32]

d. Amount of Compensation

A statute or special contract fixing an auctioneer's compensation controls; in the absence thereof, he is entitled to reasonable compensation, determinable from the circumstances.

Where the compensation of an auctioneer is fixed by statute at a certain per cent of the amount of the sales, such amount will be the remuneration to which he is entitled,[33] unless there is a special contract in writing, permitted by statute, fixing it otherwise.[34] If the amount is fixed neither by agreement nor by statute, he is entitled to reasonable compensation, and what is reasonable should be determined from the circumstances.[35] An auctioneer has been held entitled to commission only on such articles as were actually sold, paid for, and delivered.[36]

§ 12. Lien

An auctioneer has a lien on the property for his commissions and charges of sale. It may be relinquished by agreement, is satisfied by his being paid, and is lost by a delivery of the property.

An auctioneer has a lien on property which he is employed to sell for all sums due to him for his commissions and charges of sale.[37] The lien may

Sale of succession property; judicial sale

(2) Under such statute, the term "succession property" can mean only property belonging to, or depending on, a succession.—Succession of Blumberg, supra.

Priority

(1) Advances made by an auctioneer on goods received by him for sale and deducted from the proceeds after sale are in law a part of such proceeds, and not loans, so far as affects the rights of a lienholder who is entitled to the net proceeds, and who received the benefit of the advances.—Goepel v. Hamburg American Packet Co., (D.C.N.Y.) 191 F. 744.

(2) Where an assignment for the benefit of creditors is fraudulent, an auctioneer to whom the assignees have intrusted the effects to be sold has no lien upon the moneys realized from the sale, as against judgment creditors of the assignor, since the auctioneer himself is a creditor, and has agreed to the assignment.—Bone be relinquished by agreement,[38] and if the auctioneer is fully paid for his services, it is satisfied.[39] Such lien is lost by a delivery of the property;[40] likewise, an auctioneer who surrenders possession of cash deposits is not entitled to a common-law lien thereon,[41] although he may be entitled to a contract lien thereon[42]

A suit to establish and satisfy a lien contemplates the filing of appropriate pleadings in an action in which the claimant is a party.[43]

§ 13. Liabilities of Auctioneer and Clerk

a. To seller
b. To buyer
c. To persons other than buyer and seller at auction

a. To Seller

An auctioneer is liable for loss from his negligence, unless the damage is speculative; and when he fails to obey his principal's instructions he is liable for resulting loss. An auctioneer is liable for money paid him by purchasers, and may be liable for interest, and when sued for the proceeds of sale cannot set up title in himself. The seller must accept unsold property, and cannot claim the value thereof instead.

Since an auctioneer assumes an obligation to his employer to perform the services confided to him with ordinary care, diligence, and skill, he is responsible for loss arising from his negligence in failing to do so,[44] but he is not liable for a loss of which his negligence is not the proximate cause,[45] nor where the damage resulting from his alleged negligence or unskillfulness is speculative,[46] nor for a loss arising from his mistake upon a doubtful point of law, or upon a point recently decided[47]

Obedience of instructions. It is the duty of an auctioneer, like other agents, strictly to observe and obey instructions from his principal, and if he fails so to do he is liable for a resulting loss.[48] Thus, if he is directed not to sell goods below a certain price, he must put them up at such price, and he cannot sell them if they do not bring it,[49] and if they perish because they do not bring such price the loss falls on the owner.[50]

Accounting for money received. An auctioneer is liable to the seller for money paid him by purchasers[51] Where the portion of the deposit to which the seller was entitled was readily ascertainable, an auctioneer refusing to pay it over on the ground that he was not paid for his services has been held liable for interest, on a finding against him[52]

Attorney's fees will not be allowed a seller suing for the value of property not accounted for by the auctioneer, but awarded less than the full amount prayed for, under a statute providing for the recovery of attorney's fees only where the full amount claimed is recovered.[53]

Estoppel to assert title. An auctioneer sued for the proceeds of goods sold by him cannot set up

title in himself either as a defense to the action or in reduction of damages.[54]

Unsold property A seller is required to accept from an auctioneer the return of unsold property, and cannot claim the value thereof instead, even though he was unable to secure its return for a long period.[55]

b. To Buyer

(1) In general
(2) Liability for deposit
(3) Sale for undisclosed principal

(1) In General

An auctioneer may make himself personally liable by going beyond his agency, as where he warrants property without authority, and he may be liable for a failure to deliver goods, for conversion, for his fraud or false representation, or for money received through the seller's fraud.

Generally speaking, an auctioneer is not personally liable to third persons where his principal is disclosed,[56] but he must keep within the limits of his agency, and, like any other agent, may make himself personally liable by expressly pledging his own responsibility.[57] If without authority, express or implied, from his principal, an auctioneer warrants property, he makes the warranty personally and is liable thereon.[58] If he assumes the delivery of goods sold by him, he is liable for a failure to deliver them;[59] and he may be liable for conversion.[60] He is also liable for any fraud or false representation committed by him upon the buyer,[61] and may be required to account to the purchaser for money received as the fruits of the seller's fraud.[62]

An auctioneer's promise, made after the sale, to procure from the owner a written obligation to convey the premises to a bidder has been held entirely voluntary and without consideration.[63]

Counsel fees and expenses of sale cannot be recovered from an auctioneer by a purchaser recovering a deposit from him for a defect in the title.[64]

(2) Liability for Deposit

An auctioneer is responsible to the buyer for a deposit if the seller refuses or fails to complete the sale, if there is a defect in his title, or if the trade's failure of consummation is without the buyer's fault, or where the auctioneer materially misrepresented the property.

An auctioneer is responsible, as stakeholder, to the purchaser for money paid as a deposit, according to the terms of the sale, if the vendor refuses or fails to complete the conveyance or sale,[65] or

58. Hayes v. D. P. S. Nichols Co., 64 Pa. Super. 273—6 C.J. p. 843 note 28

Implied warranty

Although the sale of goods by an auctioneer "as are" relieves him from any responsibility by way of warranty or for any defects in the condition of the thing sold, it nevertheless implies the existence of the thing sold in some condition and does not protect him if the subject of the sale is wholly different from what it is represented to be.—Ruben v. Lewis, 46 N.Y.S. 426, 20 Misc. 583

"Dealers' talk"

Owing to the nature of the circumstances under which auction sales occur, the rule that mere "dealers' talk" will not be construed as a warranty applies with peculiar force.—McGrew v. Forsythe, 31 Iowa 179

Representation held not warranty surviving acceptance.—Lewitus v. Brown & Seccomb, 239 N.Y.S. 261, 228 App. Div. 146.

Warranty by clerk

Where one was acting as a clerk of an auction sale, the fact of his employment and the exercise of the duties incidental thereto do not constitute him a warrantor of the title or ownership of the property sold at the sale.—Corn Lands Farms Co. v. Barcus, 182 N.W. 487, 105 Neb. 869, 23 A.L.R. 119

Liability for price of stolen property sold

When the clerk of an auction sale receives, as such clerk, money from the purchaser of stolen property sold at said sale, and pays the money to the person who offered and procured the sale of the same, believing him to be the true owner, and the purchaser, previous to the sale, knew who offered the articles for sale, and that he purported to be the owner thereof, the clerk was not liable to the purchaser for the amount so paid.—Corn Lands Farms Co. v. If adverse claims arise as to the deposit money received by an auctioneer, one party insisting upon its return and the other on its being paid over, the auctioneer may file a

if there is a defect in the title of the vendor,[66] or if the failure of the trade to be consummated is without fault of the purchaser,[67] or where the auctioneer materially misrepresented the property sold.[68] However, if the purchaser pays to the auctioneer, in accordance with the terms of sale, a sum which is not a temporary deposit or an earnest to be forfeited on his failure to comply with the terms of the contract, but a portion of the purchase price, and which is immediately turned over to the seller, the purchaser cannot recover such sum from the auctioneer;[69] nor can he recover from the auctioneer, as a deposit, money paid not to him but to the seller, and turned over by the seller to the auctioneer in payment of his services.[70]

(3) Sale for Undisclosed Principal

An auctioneer failing to disclose the name of his principal is personally responsible as vendor, provided the contract would be valid as against the principal if authorized.

An auctioneer is personally responsible as vendor, unless at the time of the sale he discloses the name of his principal, since his general employment as auctioneer is not per se notice that he acts as agent.[71] To make the auctioneer liable, the unauthorized contract must be one which the law would enforce against the principal if it had been authorized by him.[72]

c. To Persons Other than Buyer and Seller at Auction

An auctioneer selling property for one without title is liable to the real owner for conversion, even where he acts in good faith and without knowledge of the lack of title. An auctioneer dealing as a purchaser without disclosing his principal is personally bound, even though known as an auctioneer. Statutes requiring auctioneers to collect duty on auction sales have been applied and construed.

Since, as stated in § 6 supra, an auctioneer is an agent, and as such is subject to the general rules relating to the liability of an agent for wrongful acts to third persons,[73] an auctioneer who sells property for one who has no title and pays over to his principal the proceeds is liable to the real owner for the conversion, even though such auctioneer acts in good faith, and without knowledge of the lack of title,[74] and must look to his principal

Delay in bringing suit

The fact that the successful bidder at an auction sale delays several years after the vendor's default before bringing suit against the auctioneer for the deposit made at the time of the sale does not estop him from recovering same—Merritt v Archer, 148 N.Y.S. 1008, 163 App.Div. 648, reversing 143 N.Y.S. 935, 82 Misc. 515

Auctioneer's knowledge of defect

"When the purchaser at an auction sale deposits with the auctioneer a sum of money, to be applied on the purchase price, and the auctioneer has knowledge or information of a defect in the title of the seller which will prevent him from completing the sale, the auctioneer is liable to the purchaser for the return of the deposit, even though, prior to demand and suit, he has delivered the deposit to the seller for whom he was acting as agent"—Green v Crye, 11 S.W. Reason for rule

"The principal had no title to the property and could confer none upon the auctioneer, nor authority to sell the goods. Both were without for indemnity [75] Of course, an auctioneer is liable to the true owner for the proceeds of a sale if he sells with knowledge, or under circumstances which charge him with knowledge, that the property does not belong to his principal,[76] but if he has advanced money upon goods obtained fraudulently, without notice of the fraud, he may retain the goods as against both the vendor and his creditors [77]

An auctioneer selling goods by order of a sheriff and receiving the money for the same, is accountable only to the sheriff and cannot be held as the trustee of those who may have claims on the sheriff for the proceeds.[78]

An auctioneer employed by the assignee of a chattel mortgage to conduct a foreclosure sale owed the duty to conduct a proper sale, and, having given notice to the mortgagor as required by the mortgage, he breached no legal duty he owed the mortgagor.[79]

Auctioneer as purchaser. An auctioneer dealing in his own name as a purchaser, without disclosing the name of his principal, is personally bound by his contract, even though he is known to the other party as an auctioneer, who is usually employed in selling property as the agent of others [80]

Collection of auction duty. State statutes imposing a duty on auction sales, and making the auctioneer responsible to the state for the collection of such duties, have been applied or construed in several cases [81]

§ 14. Actions by or against Auctioneers in General

An auctioneer may ordinarily sue for personal property or the purchase price thereof, or for his fees, but is not ordinarily entitled to recover the price of real estate. In varying circumstances, he may or may not sue for a deposit.

Since, as appears in § 13 a supra, an auctioneer is liable to the seller for money paid him by purchasers, and, as appears in § 12 supra, has a lien on the property for his commissions and charges of sale, he may, ordinarily, in the case of personal property, maintain an action in his own name for the purchase price thereof,[82] or for the property itself,[83] even though the owner of the property is known. In the case of real estate, however, an auctioneer is not ordinarily entitled to recover the price,[84] nor may he sue in his own name to recover a deposit to be held by him as security against loss, where no loss or damage is shown;[85] but when the terms of his employment and of the authorized sale contemplate the payment of a deposit into his hands at the time of the auction, he may sue for the deposit in his own name, whenever an action for the deposit, separate from the other purchase money, may become necessary [86]

Set-off against price A purchaser at auction may set off against the auctioneer, suing for the price, a debt due to him by the owner of the goods [87]

Fees. An auctioneer may sue in his own name for fees which the terms of sale require to be paid him by the purchaser,[88] but his right to recover authority, and the act of the auctioneer was a wrongful one He cannot hide behind his agency This neither increases nor decreases his liability nor varies the rule of law that every tort-feasor is liable jointly and severally for his act The claim that he acted in good faith is no excuse, nor that he acted in the usual course of business or innocently. . . . His intent does not vary the rule of liability An auctioneer must be on his guard against selling personal property for one merely having possession and not being the rightful owner"—Levy Bros & Adler, Rochester v Karp, 209 N Y S. 720, 721, 124 Misc 901.

§ 16. Bonds of Auctioneers and Actions Thereon

a. In general
b. Action on bond

a. In General

Statutes or ordinances requiring bonds of auctioneers have been applied and interpreted A surety's liability on an auctioneer's bond depends on its condition, and a surety may be liable to an auctioneer's employer for proceeds which he fails to pay over.

Statutes or ordinances requiring an auctioneer to give a bond, with one or more sureties, conditioned upon the faithful performance of his duty, have been applied and interpreted in several cases.[90] Such bond must conform in its provisions to the ordinance or statute governing it.[91]

Liabilities on bond. The liability of a surety on a bond required of an auctioneer depends upon the condition of the bond; it is never more extensive than the obligation which it imposes.[92] Such bonds are usually available to protect the government against violations of its regulations concerning auctioneers, and to protect individuals who have intrusted property to an auctioneer for sale,[93] they have no relation to the purchase and sale of property by an auctioneer on his own account.[94] Since, however, as appears in § 13 a supra, it is the duty of an auctioneer to account to his employer for the proceeds of a sale made by him, sureties on his bond which is conditioned that he will do whatsoever the law requires are liable to his employer for the proceeds of a sale which he wrongfully fails to pay over,[95] which liability accrues immediately upon the auctioneer's default in failing to pay over the proceeds.[96]

Sureties on such bonds have been held discharged in some circumstances[97] and not in others[98]

Part of affirmative case

Under a statute providing that no person shall act as auctioneer of personal property in any city until a bond is filed and a certificate of appointment as such auctioneer obtained, one suing for breach of a contract of hiring as auctioneer is under the duty of pleading and proving such registration as part of his affirmative case, and it is immaterial that the point was not raised upon the trial—Preiser v Solomon, 170 N.Y S 307.

95. Saul v U S Fidelity, etc, Co, 75 N Y S 615, 71 App.Div. 77—6 C J. p 845 note 47.

Bond against fraud

A bond, however, designed by the provisions of a statute as security against frauds and fraudulent practices committed upon purchasers at auction sales, does not embrace the fraud of an auctioneer in converting to his own use the proceeds of goods consigned to him for sale—Viadero v. Stacom, 12 N Y St. 114, 14 Daly 345.

Defenses

(1) Where an owner of personal property sold at auction had a secret agreement with the auctioneer that the property should not be sold except for a bid satisfactory to the owner, and it was not disputed that the property was actually sold to the highest bidder, and there was no claim that the owner made use of a "puffer" to raise the price of the property, such agreement is no defense to an action by the owner of the property on the auctioneer's bond to recover the proceeds of the sale which the auctioneer has not turned over to the owner—Gregory v. U S Fidelity, etc., Co, 91 N Y. S 595, 45 Misc 112

(2) A surety cannot object that the bond was invalid in that the principal had not taken out a license as required by statute—State v Blohm, 26 La Ann. 538—6 C.J. p 845 note 47 [d] (2).

(3) A corporation and the surety on its bond as auctioneer are estopped to set up the defense, in an action on the bond, that the corporation could not lawfully become an auctioneer—Lyon v. Stern, 34 So. 641, 110 La 473.

96. Plummer v. Bankers' Surety Co, 101 N Y S 529, 52 Misc. 97—6 C J. p 845 note 48.

Duration of liability

The liability of an auctioneer commissioned for one year, and of his sureties under a bond to perform, etc, "during the period he shall continue to act as an auctioneer under the commission that may be granted to him," continues while he acts as auctioneer, and does not expire in one year—Daly v Commonwealth, 75 Pa. 331, 333—6 C J. p 845 note 48 [a].

97. Sureties held discharged

(1) Where an auctioneer's license is void because not under the corporate seal, as required by ordinance, a surety on the bond given before the issuance of the license is not liable, although the auctioneer continued to act as such throughout the year—Georgetown v Baker, (D C) 10 F.Cas No 5,342, 2 Cranch C C. 291

(2) Where goods had been sold by the auctioneer for cash, and the owner, with the consent of the auctioneer's sureties, accepted the purchaser's notes in payment, the sureties were discharged—Mouton v. Noble, 1 La Ann. 192

98. Sureties held not discharged

(1) The neglect of a city treasurer to call on an auctioneer to render an account of his sales does not discharge the auctioneer's sureties from their liability—Charleston v. Paterson, 18 S C L. 165

(2) A discharge in bankruptcy of an auctioneer does not discharge the sureties on his official bond.—Jones v. Russell, 44 Ga. 460.

b. Action on Bond

The party first bringing suit on an auctioneer's bond is entitled to priority of payment. In such actions, the sufficiency of a complaint and of evidence have been adjudged, and the bond and license held presumed to have been given the same day.

A person who intrusts an auctioneer with the sale of goods, and who has a claim against him for money arising from the sale, may apply for and direct a suit on the auctioneer's bond even though the ordinance requiring the bond did not authorize any person in particular to sue upon it.[99] The party first bringing suit on the bond is entitled to priority of payment, although he may not obtain judgment first.[1]

Particular complaints in an action against a surety on an auctioneer's bond have been held to sufficiently aver that the auctioneer was licensed for a particular year,[2] and, in such an action, evidence has been held insufficient to show a sale of goods by the auctioneer at auction,[3] and it has been held to be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the bond and license were given the same day, the execution of the former preceding the granting of the latter.[4]

§ 17. Offenses by Auctioneers

A count for violating an ordinance must charge facts bringing the accused within its purview. The admissibility of evidence has been adjudged under a particular ordinance.

A count for the violation of an ordinance regulating jewelry auctions, in that the auctioneer failed to make and file affidavit and report, is demurrable if it fails to charge facts bringing the accused within the purview of the ordinance.[5] Under the language of a particular ordinance, it has been held that evidence showing that an auction had been carried on continuously at the accused's auction rooms for more than thirty days would be admissible if followed up with other proof to show that such continuous sale was a sale of the goods of the same merchant.[6]

Sale by unlicensed auctioneers is considered in § 7 j supra.

Sometimes, especially in the colonies, it has exercised administrative as well as judicial functions, for example, conducting examinations for clerks of courts.[17] Causes determined by an audiencia are reviewable by the tribunal supremo in Madrid. A report is required from each as to the number and character of causes determined and as to the state of judicial business.[18] (2) The place or building where the sessions of the audiencia are held.[19] (3) The sessions of the audiencia.[20] (4) The territorial jurisdiction of the audiencia.[21]

AUDIT.

As Noun

It has been said that the true meaning of the word in a particular case is to be ascertained from the context, all surrounding facts, and the purpose to be accomplished, that sometimes it is restricted in meaning to a check-up of the correctness of the account or claim and excludes any element of discretion on the part of the auditor;[27] that, at other times, it may embrace not only an examination of accounts and a comparison of charges with vouchers, but also an allowance or rejection of charges and a statement of balance for the purpose of determining the amount, if any, to be paid thereon,[28] involving an exercise of discretion by the auditing officer or board;[29] and that, under other circumstances, it may imply distinct functions and duties and their vesting in different auditing officials or boards, being used, when applied to one, in the sense of inquiring into, hearing evidence upon, adjusting, correcting, and settling details, determining the correctness of charges made, and certifying the correct result to another official or board, and, when applied to this official or board, in the sense of determining and designating the fund against which the charges should be made and upon which warrants for their payment should be drawn.[30] The term necessarily implies the auditor's knowledge of the audited claim and its presentation to him for audit,[31] its examination, and the consideration of facts relative thereto by him.[32]

The noun has been defined as meaning an examination into accounts or dealings with money or property, especially an examination by proper officers or persons appointed for that purpose who compare the charges with the vouchers, examine witnesses, and state the results; an official verification of accounts or claims;[33] a hearing, a hearing on examination;[34] an adjustment;[35] an audience;[36] an investigation;[37] an official examination of the account, comparing the vouchers with the charges and fixing the balance.[38]

gation, weighing of evidence, and deciding whether items should or should not be included,[51] or, as applied to a claim, whether it should be allowed or disallowed in toto or in part,[52] and it has been held that the word, as generally used, implies an official examination,[53] usually a hearing,[54] the exercise of judicial discretion,[55] and jurisdiction vested in the auditing official.[56]

The verb has been specifically defined as meaning to compare charges with vouchers, to examine accounts, or to examine in general;[57] to adjust, to allow or reject, to ascertain, to decide, to determine, to pass upon, or to settle;[58] to digest, to examine and adjust, to examine and adjust an account, to examine and digest, to examine and verify, or to verify;[59] to examine, settle, and adjust accounts—to verify the accuracy of the statement submitted to the auditing officer or body;[60] to hear, to hear and examine,[61] to hear, and upon the hearing to adjust, allow or reject or otherwise decide according to the nature of the claim, or to hear, examine, adjust, pass upon and settle an account and then allow or reject it.[62] In actual practice, therefore, to audit an account is to see that the accountant is charged with everything with which he is justly chargeable, and that nothing is placed on the credit side of the account for which he is not justly entitled to credit; and then, after the debit and credit are thus made up, to ascertain the balance remaining in his hands;[63] to examine an account, compare it with the vouchers, adjust the same, and to state the balance, by persons legally authorized for the purpose.[64]

§ 1. Nature and Scope of Remedy

The writ of audita querela is a common-law writ to afford relief to a judgment debtor against a judgment or execution because of some defense or discharge arising subsequent to the rendition of the judgment or the issue of the execution. Generally, the use of the writ of audita querela has been superseded by a more summary mode of relief; but the common-law remedy is not taken away by the mere establishment of a concurrent remedy.

Audita querela is a common-law writ,[1] issued on the application of a judgment or execution debtor, designed to afford relief from the consequences of a judgment or an execution on the ground of some matter of defense or discharge arising subsequent to the rendition of the judgment or issue of the execution,[2] or for the relief, in like manner, of conusors in recognizances and statutes merchant and staple.[3] As pointed out in section 3 infra, the writ is not for the purpose of authorizing a court to review or revise its opinions, neither can it be made a substitute for an appeal or writ of error. The writ is of a remedial nature, and is said to have been invented principally to relieve a party who has a good defense, but is too late to make it in the ordinary form of proceeding.[4]

Under modern practice the process sometimes acts directly on the judgment by setting it aside,[5] yet more often it acts on the execution issued on such judgment,[6] and there is also authority that at common law it did not extend to the judgment.[7]

Present status of remedy. While the writ is still used in a few states in this country, in most of the states it has been superseded by the more summary mode of application to the court for relief by petition or motion,[8] as by motion for new trial or for relief against judgment,[9] by certiorari, supersedeas, or bill in equity,[10] or by affidavit of illegality.[11]

However, the proceeding, being a common-law remedy, is not taken away or abolished by the mere establishment of a concurrent remedy suitable to the particular case,[12] and it has been held that the writ may issue after a refusal of summary relief on motion.[13] If the facts are not clear or the case presents any difficulty, the court may either order an issue for trial by jury, in which event the same mode of trial as in audita querela should prevail,[14] or it may deny the motion and put the party to his remedy by audita querela.[15]

§ 2. Judgments and Executions Subject to Review

Judgments against which the judgment debtor has had no opportunity to defend, as well as judgments rendered in the various specific situations hereunder discussed, may be set aside by a writ of audita querela. Audita querela is a proper remedy to set aside an execution when its issue was irregular or its use unlawful, or when the levy or return was irregular or void. Audita querela, where used, is a proper remedy to avoid an execution where the judgment has been released, satisfied, or otherwise discharged.

A judgment may be vacated by writ of audita querela when defendant had no opportunity to defend the suit because not served with process,[16] or when, although he had due notice of the suit, he was prevented from making his defense by his adversary's fraud.[17] Where, however, the officer's return shows personal service, the writ cannot be maintained to set aside, for want of notice, a judgment by default, the return being conclusive between the parties.[18]

The writ will also lie to vacate a judgment rendered against either an infant[19] or an insane person[20] who was not represented by a guardian; to obtain relief against a judgment in a secondary or collateral action when the original action has been barred, reversed, or set aside,[21] to set aside a judgment irregularly entered after a discontinuance or entered in contravention of an agreement for a continuance,[22] to set aside a judgment from which an appeal was wrongfully denied by the inferior court,[23] provided the suit was appealable on its face[24] and the party fully complied with all the requirements of the law with regard to the perfecting of his appeal.[25] The writ will also lie to set aside the judgment of a justice of the peace when he had no jurisdiction over the subject matter,[26] or when the justice did some act which he had no legal right to do, or omitted to do some act which it was his duty to do.[27] However, the writ will not lie to set aside an erroneous judgment of a justice of the peace when he had complete jurisdiction,[28] or to set aside a release of a judgment on satisfaction.[29] Particular grounds as bases for audita querela generally see infra this Title § 3.

When issue of execution, levy, or return irregular or void. Audita querela lies to set aside an execution which is irregular in some particular or void,[30] which was irregularly issued[31] or unlawfully used,[32] under which an irregular levy was made,[33] or on

Mistake no defense

Although, as pointed out in § 2 supra, there is authority that the writ may not be used to correct the mistakes of the clerk, it has also been held that the fact that an execution is irregularly issued by a mistake of the clerk or an attorney is no defense to the audita querela.—Phelps v. Slade, 13 Vt. 195.

which the officer made a false return.[34] It also lies to supersede an alias execution when satisfaction has been made wholly or in part on a prior execution.[35] The writ lies as well after the levy of an execution is begun as before.[36]

Particular grounds as bases for audita querela generally see infra this Title § 3.

When judgment released, satisfied, or otherwise discharged The writ of audita querela has also long been recognized as the proper remedy to avoid an execution which has been sued out after the judgment has been released,[37] paid,[38] or satisfied on a prior execution,[39] or where any other matter has occurred which operated as a discharge of the judgment.[40]

Even the tender of the amount due on an execution and a refusal to receive it may entitle the debtor to relief by audita querela, when the tender is kept good and is properly pleaded,[41] but it has also been held that, where a petition for the writ averred an agreement to accept a certain sum in compromise of a larger judgment and an actual receipt of the greater part with a tender of the balance, it was not error to refuse the writ, as in order to discharge the judgment the agreement must be fully executed.[42]

Likewise, when two suits are brought at the same time for the same cause of action and proceed pari passu to judgment and execution, a satisfaction of either judgment may be shown on audita querela in discharge of the other.[43]

The writ is also a proper method of obtaining relief when the debtor, after judgment, has obtained a discharge in bankruptcy,[44] when the debt is attached in the debtor's hands by a judgment creditor of plaintiff,[45] or where the legality of a debtor's imprisonment is affected by matter of discharge occurring after the judgment.[46]

Particular grounds as basis for audita querela generally see infra this Title § 3.

§ 3. Grounds for Review

Audita querela lies when the party suing it out is injured or is in danger of injury because of the fraud, oppression, or other misconduct of the opposite party. The writ will not lie where the party desiring it had a legal opportunity to avail himself of the matter of his complaint, or where his injury is attributable to his own neglect, or where the matter of his complaint is a subject for a writ of error

A function and purpose of a writ of audita querela is to relieve the party suing it out from the fraud, oppression, or other misconduct of the opposite party.[47] The misconduct complained of need not be intentional; it may be legal misconduct merely,[48] or permissive, not actual, misconduct.[49] Injury, or danger of injury, seems to be essential to the maintenance of the action.[50] If the matter complained of is simply nugatory and void, the party has no need of the process.[51] However, it is not necessary that the party suing it out shall be actually in execution or that an execution shall have actually issued; it is sufficient that he is exposed to, and is threatened with, execution.[52] After suing out a writ plaintiff in the audita querela proceeding is justified in pursuing it until he knows that he is in no danger from the execution, although the execution was not in the officer's hands at the time the writ issued.[53]

Although the proceeding is authorized and the forms are prescribed by statute, the rules of the common law determine the cases in which audita querela is a suitable remedy[54] and also the principles by which the suit is to be governed.[55]

On the other hand, a party is not entitled to relief by audita querela when he has had a legal opportunity to avail himself of the matters of defense set forth in his complaint, or when the injury of which he complains is attributable to his own neglect,[56] or to that of his agent or codefendant.[57] The writ bears solely on the acts of the opposite party,[58] and it may not be used to correct the fraud or misconduct of the court,[59] the mistakes of the clerk,[60] or an erroneous taxation of costs,[61] even though procured by the fraud of the opposite party.[62] The writ, it has been held, will not lie where the matter of the complaint is a proper subject for a writ of error,[63] although such remedy is taken away by statute.[64] Likewise, the writ cannot be used for mere irregularities not going to the absolute validity of the process or to the substantive merits of the controversy,[65] and neither may purely equitable defenses, not cognizable at law, be set up by audita querela.[66]

§ 4. Proceedings for Writ

Audita querela, being of common-law origin, the proceedings for the writ follow the rules of procedure at common law.

Although the writ may be authorized by statute, the writ of audita querela is derived from the common law and is governed by common-law rules of practice.[67] The proceeding is a regular suit or action[68] in which parties may plead and take issue, either in law or in fact,[69] and in which a regular judgment must be pronounced.[70] While the complaint generally sounds in tort,[71] the proceeding is in the nature of a bill in equity.[72]

§ 5. —— Time of Making Application

A party is not limited to a specific time within which he may sue out his writ of audita querela.

Since the party injured may neither know of a judgment or execution in the former proceeding nor the manner of procuring the same until some time after the rendition of the judgment or the issue of the execution therein, it has been held that he is not limited to a specific time within which he must sue out his writ of audita querela.[73]

§ 6. —— Jurisdiction

Audita querela is directed only to the court in which judgment was rendered and where the record remains.

Audita querela is a judicial writ founded on the record, and on common principles is directed only to the court in which judgment was rendered and where the record remains.[74] It has been said that the writ issues from a court of law only.[75]

§ 7. —— Parties

The audita querela plaintiff must be an injured defendant in the former proceeding, and all parties who were benefited therein should be made parties defendant. Where a joint judgment was rendered, all defendants thereto must be joined as parties plaintiff, unless their complaints are different, or the judgment against those not joined is good, or the object is to get relief from execution against only one of them.

An audita querela, being a judicial writ, must be between the parties to the former proceeding and their legal representatives only.[76] Although it may be authorized by statute, audita querela is governed by the common law as to misjoinder of parties.[77]

Parties plaintiff. With respect to the parties plaintiff in audita querela, it is held that the person suing out the writ must be one injured in the former proceeding,[78] and ordinarily a defendant therein;[79] and hence, one in whose favor the judgment had been rendered merely for the purpose of aiding in its enforcement by setting aside its release or satisfaction was held not a proper party plaintiff,[80] but defendant to a set-off, although plaintiff in the former proceeding, may sue out a writ of audita querela.[81]

When the basis of the writ is altogether personal, it will die with the person and not survive to his representatives,[82] but when the writ goes to the foundation of the judgment it may be prosecuted by an executor or an administrator.[83]

Where there was more than one defendant in the original proceeding and a joint judgment was rendered affecting all of them, the writ must be sued out in the name of all,[84] unless their grounds of complaint are wholly different[85] or the judgment complained of is admitted to be good as to some, in which case it has been held that the writ may be brought in the name of defendant for whose benefit the proceeding is instituted,[86] or unless the object is to obtain relief against an execution affecting only one defendant.[87] The rule is not altered by the fact that one of the defendants was a party to the fraud which vitiates the judgment; he must still join in the writ.[88]

Parties defendant. All persons benefited by the judgment or execution complained of, if parties thereto, or the legal representatives of such persons, should be made parties defendant to an audita querela.[89] The writ will not lie against the state[90] or the United States.[91]

§ 8. —— Application for and Granting Writ

a. In general
b. Dismissal or discontinuance

a. In General

Application for the writ is generally made on notice by motion or petition stating the grounds for relief with such certainty as to be good against demurrer, and verification of the stated facts is usually required.

While it has been said that the injured party may be entitled to the writ as a matter of right and without petition or motion,[92] the better rule is that a writ of audita querela can be awarded only on motion or petition,[93] setting forth the grounds of relief with such certainty as would be good on demurrer.[94] Since, as is pointed out in section 2 supra, the proceedings on the writ take the form of a suit at law, it would seem that notice of the application should be had, and the practice is to grant an order to show cause.[95]

An affidavit to the truth of the facts set forth in the writ is generally required.[96] Such affidavit may be made by any other competent person as well as by defendant.[97] It is not necessary that the affidavit should be annexed to the writ, or become part of the process.[98]

b. Dismissal or Discontinuance

An application for audita querela may be dismissed where the court has no jurisdiction, and, likewise, for other good reasons. Any one of several plaintiffs may release or discharge the suit without the concurrence of the others.

A motion to dismiss a writ of audita querela lies where the court has no jurisdiction to entertain the writ;[1] where a statutory requirement as to security is not complied with,[2] unless such noncompliance was due to the fault of the court and not of plaintiff in the audita querela application;[3] where process is not served on all the defendants;[4] or where there is an improper joinder of plaintiffs.[5] Where a writ is turned into a writ of audita querela by means of an amendment, a motion to dismiss, made promptly thereafter is in time.[6]

Where there are two or more audita querela plaintiffs, either of them may release or discharge the suit without the concurrence of the others.[7] and, by virtue of statute, may issue either as a summons or as an attachment, or in a proper case as a venire facias or a scire facias. The writ must be served on all parties made defendants to it. The issue of the writ does not operate as a supersedeas, but a supersedeas may be granted when necessary.

The writ is sometimes regarded as judicial.[8] By virtue of statute, the writ may issue either as a summons or as an attachment,[9] or, in a proper case, the process may be either in the form of a scire facias or of a venire facias.[10]

Service of writ. The writ of audita querela must be served on all the parties made defendants to it.[11] Service on a corporation is effected in the same manner as in the case of any other writ.[12]

Effect of issuance. The issue of the writ does not of itself operate as a supersedeas which may be granted or not, according to the requirements of justice.[13] However, all statutory requirements must be complied with before a supersedeas is granted.[14]

§ 10. Appearance of Defendant

The defendant in audita querela must enter an appearance. Judgment by default is not proper, the procedure being for the plaintiff to enter a common appearance for the defendant where he fails to appear.

Defendant in audita querela must, of course, enter an appearance as in other cases.[15] Judgment by default for want of appearance is not proper, but plaintiff may enter a common appearance for defendant who may then be ruled to plead as in other cases.[16]

§ 11. Pleading

a. Declaration
b. Answer or plea

a. Declaration

The declaration should show the record of the former proceeding and a sufficient cause of complaint. The grounds of objection to the previous proceeding must be specially averred.

The declaration in audita querela should either set out the whole record of the recovery in the former proceeding, or recite it generally, and should show a sufficient gravamen, or cause of complaint.[17]

The ground of objection to the proceeding attacked must be specifically averred.[18] However, the plaintiff need not aver that he had a good defense to the original action.[19]

Where a tender of the sum due defendant on the execution complained of is alleged as a ground of relief, it is not sufficient to allege the bare fact of tender, but a readiness to pay must appear affirmatively by the declaration.[20] Specific or general relief for the act complained of should be prayed or indicated in the declaration.[21]

A declaration in an audita querela may, in a proper case, be amended.[22]

Demurrer to declaration. A demurrer is proper where the matter alleged as the cause of complaint might have been pleaded in bar of the original action,[23] where plaintiff's remedy is not by audita querela, but by some other form of proceeding;[24] where there is a want of necessary parties;[25] or where the declaration fails generally to show a good cause of action.[26]

b. Answer or Plea

A plea or motion in abatement is proper where the writ has not been served on all defendants, or where proper security has not been taken. The usual plea in bar is "not guilty," although the practice has also been to traverse some decisive fact or to use a general and express denial of all the facts alleged

A plea in abatement, or a motion to that effect, is proper where the writ has not been served on all the defendants,[27] or where proper security has not been taken.[28]

The plea in bar in audita querela usually is "not guilty";[29] but this has been said to be rather a matter of convenience and choice than the result of any established principle of pleading,[30] and the practice has sometimes been different, as by traversing some decisive fact in the complaint, or by a general and express denial of all the facts alleged[31] A prior judgment in audita querela on the same cause of action may be pleaded in estoppel.[32] No one plea, however, may be double[33]

Demurrer to plea. Where a special plea in audita querela is insufficient, a demurrer to the plea is proper.[34]

§ 12. Evidence

The proceedings and judgment complained of are presumed to be regular, and the burden is on the plaintiff to overcome this presumption. Generally, this may be done by parol evidence The pleadings in the former action are admissible to show that the issues in the audita querela were involved therein.

When a record of a judgment is produced, the presumption is in favor of the regularity of the judgment; it will be presumed that all things were rightly done, and a party seeking to avoid the judgment by audita querela must, by his evidence, overcome this presumption[35]

Pleadings in the action in which the judgment complained of was rendered are admissible to prove that the issues in the audita querela were involved in the former proceeding.[36] Parol evidence generally is admissible to show that the proceedings and judgment complained of are invalid and ineffectual against plaintiff, notwithstanding the record is sufficient on its face, the whole object of the audita querela being to question, invalidate, and annul the record[37] However, if the record is not sufficient on its face, it cannot be eked out by parol evidence[38]

§ 13. Trial or Hearing

On the hearing of an application for audita querela common-law rules apply Where an issue of fact is presented, either party may demand a jury trial, unless it can be tried by the record.

The common-law rules of practice are applicable in the hearing on an application for audita querela, although the nature of the remedy is equitable[39] Where an issue of fact is presented, either party may demand trial by jury unless it can be tried by the record, or the parties may agree to submit the issues of fact to the court alone for trial.[40]

§ 14. Judgment

Common-law rules govern as to judgments in audita querela A favorable decision for the plaintiff in audita querela prevents further proceedings on the judgment, and entitles him to damages for the wrongful act. The court in rendering decision for the defendant cannot order further proceedings in the former action.

In rendering judgments in audita querela the court is governed by common-law rules of practice[41] Either plaintiff in audita querela prevails in whole or in part, and recovers judgment to the extent to which he is entitled to it, or there is a judgment for defendant, and this is the whole scope and effect of the audita querela[42]

The decision, if in favor of plaintiff in audita querela, puts an end to the judgment, so that no further proceedings can be taken on it,[43] and it is improper to make an order bringing forward the original action on the docket.[44] Moreover, plaintiff may recover of the opposite party his damages for the wrongful act complained of.[45]

When defendant in audita querela is successful, there is simply a "judgment for defendant," and the court cannot order further proceedings in the former action.[46]

plaintiff, the court cannot render judgment for defendant, notwithstanding the verdict.[47]

§ 15. Review

The proceedings under the writ are subject to review.

The proceedings under the writ may be reviewed by appeal,[48] or by writ of error.[49]

§ 16. Costs

The successful party in audita querela is entitled to costs. The plaintiff must give sufficient security where such security would be required in ordinary action.

Costs are recoverable by the successful party in audita querela.[50] Where nonsuit is entered by plaintiff, defendant is entitled to costs.[51]

Security for costs. Plaintiff in audita querela must give security for costs in those cases where such security would be required in ordinary actions,[52] and the security must be of such a nature as to secure redelivery of the body or the estate, where either of them has been taken in execution,[53] and payment of intervening damages.[54] A statute expressly requiring a recognizance must be strictly complied with[55] or the suit may be dismissed (supra § 8 b).

§ 17. Liabilities on Bonds or Recognizances

a. In general
b. Action

a. In General

Recovery on the audita querela plaintiff's bond or recognizance for costs can only be had where the court had jurisdiction of the writ. Where the basis of the writ is personal the liability of the principal is personal and does not extend to the executor or administrator of decedent principal.

No recovery can be had on audita querela plaintiff's bond or recognizance for costs where the court in which the audita querela was brought had no jurisdiction,[56] where, however, the court had jurisdiction, a breach of condition of the bond creates a liability in accordance with the condition.[57] The liability of the principal is personal where the basis of the audita querela is personal, and in such case an executor or administrator of a decedent principal is not liable.[58] Where the writ is refused, the interest on the judgment accumulated during the delay of execution caused by the writ is not recoverable on plaintiff's bond.[59]

b. Action

Debt lies on the recognizance, although not returned into court, and the record of the recognizance is conclusive of the consent of the obligor. A minute of the recognizance signed by the judge cannot be contradicted by parol.

Debt lies on a recognizance taken on the issue of an audita querela, even though the recognizance is not returned into court,[60] the record of the recognizance being conclusive evidence in an action thereon that it was entered with the consent of defendant.[61] Parol evidence is not admissible to contradict a minute of recognizance signed by the judge and appended to the writ of audita querela.[62]

AUDITOR. The term is used in different senses, depending on the nature of duties imposed.[1] As used in the law relating to county administration, the word is defined and the subject matter treated in the title Counties §§ 116, 132, 140 [15 C.J. p 500 note 81–p 501 note 95, p 512 note 48–p 513 note 67, p 517 note 64–p 518 note 74]; similarly with relation to municipal administration in the title Municipal Corporations §§ 2176–2180 [44 C.J. p 1443 note 67–p 1449 note 33]; and with relation to state administration in the title States § 63 [59 C.J. p 115 note 51–p 116 note 65].

In Spanish law, the judge who, in conjunction with the commanding general of an army or province, hears military causes in the first instance.—Escriche Diccionario—6 C.J. p 861 notes 16–18.

In its more general applications, the word "auditor" has been defined as meaning an officer or person whose business or function is to examine and verify the accounts of persons intrusted with moneys, to examine an account or accounts, compare the charges with the vouchers, examine the parties and witnesses, allow or reject charges and state the balance,[2] more particularly to examine, verify, and approve or report accounts of persons who have had the disbursement of government money or have furnished supplies for government use.[3] In a particular connection, the word connotes a ministerial officer whose duty it is to make computations and mathematical examinations of claims for presentation to another officer or board with quasi judicial functions and duties of passing finally upon the claims, and, so used, negatives the existence of any discretionary power.[4]

Analogously, when used to designate certain judicial officers, the word has been defined as meaning an agent or officer of a court, either of law or equity, appointed to examine and digest accounts for decision and to prepare materials on which an order, judgment, or decree may be made,[5] or to state the items of debt and credit between parties, and to exhibit the balance,[6] a person appointed in an action at law in cases where a preliminary or tentative investigation becomes necessary;[7] and in a slightly different sense, in the same connection, an instrument of the court by which the law is administered,[8] an officer of the court,[9] an officer of the court appointed to hear the parties and their evidence, to find the facts and report the same to the court,[10] one who hears judicially;[11] also a person called in by the court to hear matters of detail which the court has not time to hear, and to inform the conscience of the court as to facts which are essential to be known before a particular judgment or decree can be pronounced.[12] "Auditor" has been held synonymous with "comptroller" or "controller;"[13] and has been distinguished from "accountant,"[14] "arbitrator" (see Arbitration and Award § 1), "auditor in action of account,"[15] and "master."[16]

Auditor of the imprest. Any of several officers in the English exchequer, who formerly had the charge of auditing the accounts of the customs, naval and military expenses, etc., now performed by the commissioners for auditing public accounts.[17]

with power to do a thing;[59] to permit;[60] to permit a thing to be done in the future;[61] and, in slightly different senses, to approve of; to sanction formally,[62] to warrant; to justify; to furnish a ground for.[63] In these senses, "authorize" has been distinguished from: "Approve,"[64] "instruct,"[65] "obligate," and "require."[66] It has been said, however, that the word may be used as having a mandatory effect or meaning, implying a direction to act, used in the sense of "to require."[67]

Phrases "Authorize and empower,"[68] "'authorize' that the damages . . . be diminished,"[69] "authorize the board . . . to contract,"[70] "authorize the city . . . to buy, etc,"[71] "'authorize' the commissioners,"[72] "'authorize' them to pay a suitable and reasonable amount,"[73] "authorize to be operated,"[74] and "would not authorize a verdict;"[75] also "authorizes loans and grants,"[76] "authorizes the commissioner to refund,"[77] "authorizes the jury to find for plaintiff,"[78] and "'authorizes' the jury to make this deduction;"[79] and also "'authorizing' public officers to do an act,"[80] and "authorizing sale."[81]

Authorized

In the past tense, or as the past participle, "authorized" has been defined as meaning clothed with authority, warrant, or legal power;[82] directed;[83] empowered;[84] empowered and directed;[85] entitled;[86] permitted;[87] possessed of, or endowed with, authority;[88] sanctioned or approved by authority.[89]

It has been said that as used in orders, statutes, and the like,[90] and taken always according to the purposes and intent of the order, or statute, under consideration,[91] the word is equivocal, since it may be either discretionary and permissive or imperative and mandatory.[92] Ordinarily it is said to be permissive merely,[93] not being on its face mandatory,[94] but being given its natural significance of a grant of power rather than an imposition of a duty,[95] and implying either a discretionary or permissive power.[96] When, however, the word is used in a statute providing for the doing of some act required by public duty or justice or where the rights of a citizen are concerned, it has been held that the word is to be construed as mandatory;[97] and that it may imply an imposition of a duty,[98] the giving of a definite direction,[99] or even a positive command,[1] in the absence of specific words rendering it discretionary.[2] "Authorized" has been said to be distinguished generally from "directed,"[3] "instructed,"[4] and "required."[5]

Phrases: "Authorized agent,"[6] "authorized and directed,"[7] "authorized and empowered."[8] "authorized and lawful charges,"[9] "'authorized' and 'permitted,'"[10] "authorized and required,"[11] "authorized a verdict,"[12] "authorized by express or implied consent,"[13] "authorized by law,"[14] "authorized by law to be issued,"[15] "authorized by this ar-

Discussing an objection that an instruction, "Evidence may be autoptic proference" was incorrect, the court said. "As to the other objection—that the language is abstractly incorrect—if incorrectness from a legal standpoint is intended, the objection may be disposed of by citing Wigmore on Evidence, § 1150 et seq If philological incorrectness is referred to, the objection is more tenable, for, while 'autoptic' is a good word, with pride of ancestry, though perhaps without hope of posterity, the word 'proference' is a glossological illegitimate, a neological love-child, of which a great law writer confesses himself to be the father (see Wigmore on Evidence, § 1150, note 1) Despite all this, we cannot brand the statement as reversible error . . . During the progress of the trial, certain bottles and their contents had been introduced in evidence and were given to the jury for their consideration, and the necessity was upon the judge of explaining to the jurors what use they could make of this class of testimony As to such evidence, the older writers used the phrase 'real evidence,' but Professor Wigmore in his wonderful treatise has pointed out that this is not an accurate expression, and has coined a new phrase, 'autoptic proference' to express it. Following Wigmore, Judge Felton, [the trial judge], used this expression, and then most clearly explained and illustrated to the jury, in plain, simple, homely language, just what the big words meant"—Morse v State, 72 S E. 534, 535, 10 Ga App 61

"They multiply by dividing transversely in half. Bacteria may be divided into two classes, aerobic and anaerobic. Aerobic bacteria grow, multiply, and perform their functions best when free oxygen is present. The smallest trace of oxygen prevents the growth, multiplication, or functioning of anaerobic bacteria. When surrounding conditions become unfavorable to growth, bacteria pass into what may be called a hibernating stage and are called 'spores' or 'in spore form'. They may continue in this state for a long time and will resist injurious influences such as excessive heat, cold, and chemicals. Under proper temperature with food present they will again come into the vegetative form and will grow, multiply, and carry on their life work."—Guaranty Trust Co. of New York v. Bad faith. It has been said that "bad faith" cannot be defined with mathematical precision,[14] and is not a technical term used only in actions of deceit,[15] but that it is a term of variable significance and rather broad application,[16] and that its ultimate definition would depend upon the facts and circumstances of a given controversy.[17] Although the term has been said to be an indefinite one,[18] it has been described as one of those terms which carries its own meaning,[19] or as an ordinary expression, the meaning of which is not doubtful;[20] and the various courts have held that it contains the element of intent to do wrong in some degree, actual or necessarily inferable,[21] embraces and connotes deceit, fraud, dishonesty, one-sidedness of intention or purpose,[22] implies a false motive or a false purpose, and hence a species of fraudulent conduct,[23] implies or presupposes knowledge, actual or clearly implied, and not mere suspicion of a defect affecting a contemplated transaction,[24] in-
